2. It is sometimes difficult to understand the governmental hierarchy of other governments and sometimes difficult to understand the hierarchy of one's own. In the United States, the governmental agency responsible for housing and renewal programmes is called the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA). This agency is headed by an Administrator, the present incumbent being Dr. Robert C. Weaver who was appointed by President Kennedy. Under Administrator Weaver, there are five subordinate agencies called "Constituent Agencies." These five agencies are the Urban Renewal Administration (URA) ; the Public Housing Administration (PHA) ; the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) which handles the mortgage insurance programme ; the Community Facilities Administration (CFA) which provides loans and grants to small cities for, as the name indicates, community facilities and also has programmes for aiding colleges in building dormitories ; and the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA), an agency that deals in the secondary mortgage market and about which I shall have more to say later. It is affectionately known by nearly everyone as "Fanny Mae." Authority for the urban renewal programme is delegated by the Administrator to the Commissioner of URA.

9. A good description of such subdivisions around Chicago, Illinois is found in "Dead" Land, Illinois State Housing Board 8 March, 1949.

10. With the passage of subsequent housing acts, the total amount authorised through 1964 was $4,725,000,000. Of this amount some $4,500,000,000 had been earmarked or spent for some 1,764 urban renewal projects as of March 1965.

13. In April 1961, only 12 cities had received assistance under this programme. By April 1965, 127 cities had active or completed Community Renewal Programmes.

14. Housing Act of 1954, 68 Stat. 590, 623.

15. For example, at the time this amendment was adopted, there were only 56 cities that had what could be called a housing code that established minimum standards for all existing housing. In February of 1965, there were some 900 cities with such codes.

16. It was this year that the term "slum clearance and community development and redevelopment" was changed to "slum clearance and urban renewal." Urban renewal was considered a more generic term covering both clearance (redevelopment) and rehabilitation. Housing Act of 1954, 68 Stat. 590.

17. The major changes in the urban redevelopment legislation in 1954 resulted from the 1953 report of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Housing Policies and Programmes headed by Albert M. Cole, the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency during most of the years of the Eisenhower Administration.

18. The terms "rehabilitation" and "conservation" are generally used interchangeably in the United States. Attempts at more precise definitions have never really caught on. See for example my article "Conservation of Existing Housing," Law and Contemporary Problems, Vol. XX, No. 3, Summer of 1955, School of Law, Duke University.

19. Housing Act of 1961, 75 Stat. 149.

20. A fine example of the effect of refinancing can be seen from a specific case of a three-family house rehabilitated in New Haven, Connecticut. Prior to rehabilitation, the house carried two conventional mortgages and attachments worth approximately $15,000, requiring monthly payments of about $225. Approximately $2,500 was borrowed to rehabilitate the structure. The new FHA section 220 mortgage covering both the refinancing and the cost of rehabilitation required monthly payments of only $102 due to a lower interest rate and a longer repayment term. This example is by no means an isolated one although the reduction in monthly payments usually will not be as dramatic.

21. See, for example, the 6 November 1964 Time cover story.

22. In 1962, FNMA adopted a system that encouraged builders to seek private financing by assuring them that FNMA would purchase the mortgage if no private investor was willing to do so and agreeing to refund a portion of the commitment fee if a private investor decided to invest. Thus a builder could commence construction assured of permanent financing and, during the construction period, continue to seek private investors with little financial penalty. This provision reduced dramatically the number of mortgages actually purchased by FNMA.

23. The survey showed 94 per cent of those whose whereabouts were known were in standard housing. The Housing of Relocated Families, Summary of a Bureau of the Census Survey of Families Recently Displaced from Urban Renewal Sites dated March 1965 published by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Office of the Administrator.

24. The rental housing programme is section 221 (d) (4) ; the sales housing programme is section 221 (d) (2). Between 1954, the year the programme was authorised, and December 1964, 4,615 units were placed under construction under the rental programme and 125,043 units under the sales programme.

25. Between this programme's inception in 1961 and 1964, 35,494 units have been programmed, 10,698 of which are in urban renewal areas.

26. For a case study of what happens to businesses displaced by urban renewal and other public programmes see The Impact of Dislocation from Urban Renewal Areas on Small Business by William N. Kinnard, Jr., and Zenon S. Malinowski, July 1960, published by the University of Connecticut.

27. The considerable variety of practices in land acquisition among departments of the Federal Government in both direct acquisition and in grant-in-aid programmes created some concern in Congress, and in 1961 Congress appointed a Select Sub-Committee on Real Property Acquisition to look into the situation. The report of this Committee was issued 22 December 1964 and is an excellent examination of land acquisition practices and laws in the United States. It also addresses itself to the question of "good will."

28. For a discussion of design and renewal plans see Roger Montgomery's article, "Improving the Design Process in Urban Renewal," AIP Journal, February 1965 (Vol. XXXI–1).

29. The famous Supreme Court case on urban renewal, Berman v. Parker, 348 US, 26 DC (1954) gave quite a push to urban design when the court said, "It is within the power of the legislature to determine that the community should be beautiful as well as healthy, spacious as well as clean, well-balanced as well as carefully patrolled. In the present case, the Congress and its authorised agencies have made determinations that take into account a wide variety of values. It is not for us to reappraise them. If those who govern the District of Columbia decide that the Nation's capital should be beautiful as well as sanitary, there is nothing in the Fifth Amendment that stands in the way."

30. This is a most involved subject and it is impossible to begin to cover it adequately here. The first action of consequence to break down discrimination in housing was a decision of the United States Supreme Court that racially restrictive covenants on the land were unenforceable in the courts. (Shelly v. Kraemer, 334 US 1, 1948). In November 1962, President Kennedy issued his Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing which prohibited discrimination in housing owned and operated by the United States Government or assisted through mortgage insurance (FHA), urban renewal, or public housing. In addition 18 states and 35 cities have adopted laws prohibiting discrimination in housing. And of course, on 2 July 1964, President Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act which broadly bans discrimination in Federal Aid programmes including housing (except for FHA) and renewal programmes.

31. Its official name is the Economic Opportunity Programme.

SUMMARY OF THE URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAM

the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965)

Urban Renewal is the term used to describe the diversified efforts by localities, with the assistance of the Federal Government, for the elimination and prevention of slums and blight, whether residential or nonresidential, and the removal of the factors that create slums and blighting conditions. In the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, as well as in other legislation, Congress has enacted a number of provisions which include loans, grants, technical assistance, and special mortgage insurance in urban renewal areas. Taken together they represent a "kit of tools" making possible a partnership among local governments, private enterprise, citizens, and the Federal Government in mounting an offensive against slums and the causes of urban blight.

Urban Renewal is a local program--locally conceived, planned, and executed. It is a concerted effort by a community, through its public and private resources, to prevent and correct urban blight and decay and to set in motion long-range, planned redevelopment of both residential and nonresidential neighborhoods. It has two main elements: (1) Slum prevention through neighborhood conservation and rehabilitation of structures. (2) Clearance and redevelopment of structures and neighborhoods.

Urban renewal projects are planned and carried out by a local public agency, which, depending on State law, may be a separate public agency, a local housing authority, or a department of a city government.

Federal assistance is available to help the community carry out its plan when local resources alone are not adequate to do the job. To qualify for Federal assistance to an urban renewal project, a community must adopt. and have certified by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, a Workable Program for Community Improvement, in which it commits itself to the attainment of certain objectives.

Through the requirement of a Workable Program for Community Improvement, urban renewal projects are tied to a broad and systematic effort to eliminate blight and prevent its recurrence through (1) codes and ordinances, (2) a comprehensive community plan, (3) neighborhood analyses, (4) administrative organization, (5) financing the program, (6) housing for displaced families, and (7) citizen participation.

HOW THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT HELPS

Federal assistance is available to help a community carry out the related major phases of a comprehensive urban renewal program. These aids include:

Title I
- Grant assistance for the preparation of full-range renewal programs on a community-wide basis, including the identification of needs, estimates of financial, rehousing and other resources, and development of tentative schedules.

Title I
- Financial aid in planning and carrying out urban renewal projects involving the rebuilding or conservation of blighted and deteriorating urban areas. This assistance is provided for specific projects and for planning general neighborhood areas to be renewed over a period of years.

Sec. 701
- Grant assistance for comprehensive planning either in metropolitan or other urban areas or in smaller communities for which comprehensive planning aids are usually inadequate.

Code Enforcement — HUD Act of 1965
- Grant assistance to cities, other municipalities, and counties for carrying out programs of concentrated code enforcement in deteriorated or deteriorating areas, outside of urban renewal project areas. Grants may be authorized only for areas in which code enforcement, together with public improvements provided by the locality, may be expected to arrest the decline of the area.

Sec. 314
- Grant assistance for demonstrations of urban renewal techniques.

Sec. 220
- Special FHA financing aids for new or rehabilitated housing in the redevelopment of urban renewal project areas.

Sec. 221 and Housing Act of 1937
- Special FHA financial aids and public housing assistance to provide low-cost private or public housing for families displaced by urban renewal or other public activities.

Demolition Grants — HUD Act of 1965
- Grant assistance to cities, municipalities, and counties to assist in financing the cost of demolishing structures which, under State or local law, have been determined to be structurally unsound or unfit for human habitation.

Open Space Land
- Grant assistance to communities to help provide, preserve, and develop lands having value for park and recreation, conservation, scenic or historic uses.

Urban Beautification
- Grant assistance to communities in carrying out local beautification programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas.

The following sections give in summary the main facts about these various kinds of Federal assistance.

URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

AN URBAN RENEWAL PROJECT MAY INVOLVE:

- Acquiring and clearing a slum or blighted area--either residential or nonresidential--and disposing of the land for redevelopment in accordance with planned uses.

- Rehabilitation of structures in such an area by property owners, accompanied by improvement of community facilities by the local government, resulting in conservation of the area.

- Any combination of the above.

However, Federal assistance for urban renewal projects involving demolition and clearance may be provided only where the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines that the objectives of the urban renewal plan could not be achieved through rehabilitation of the project area.

EXECUTION OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Project execution activities may include land acquisition, temporary operation of acquired property, relocation of site occupants, demolition work, installation of project improvements, rehabilitation, conservation, and code enforcement activities, land disposition activities, and relocation of historic structures.

FINANCING URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

An urban renewal project is financed by an arrangement between the local public agency and the Federal Government which calls for local contributions, Federal advances and loans, and ultimately a Federal capital grant.

The locality's contribution may take the form of cash or noncash grants-in-aid, such as donations of land, demolition and removal work, project improvements, certain expenditures by colleges, universities, and hospitals, or public facilities.

Net project cost, or loss, for purposes of determining the amount of the Federal grant, is the total of expenditures for project execution activities plus the value of local noncash grants-in-aid, less the proceeds from land disposition.

Capital Grants.

An urban renewal capital grant covers the Federal share of net project cost. The percentage of a capital grant varies, depending on size of the community and other factors:

- For any municipality having a population of 50,000 or less, or a municipality situated in a labor market area designated as a redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act or successor legislation, the Federal contribution is three-fourths of net project cost.

For any other municipality, the Federal contribution is two-thirds of net project cost. In these communities, the Federal share may be three-fourths if the locality elects to exclude from project cost certain local administrative, survey, and planning expenses.

Advances and Loans.

Federal advances and loans may be made to finance project planning and provide working capital for execution activities.

- Planning Advances. Funds may be advanced to finance surveys and planning work necessary before actual operations of the project.

- Temporary Loans. These Federal loans are used by the community as working capital in acquiring land and structures in the project area, clearing the site, preparing the area for redevelopment or conservation, and all other execution activities. The contract with the Federal Government may be used by the local public agency to secure private financing at lower interest rates than the Federal rate.

- Other Financing. Federal capital grant progress payments, local cash grants-in-aid, and land disposition proceeds may be used to provide temporary financing as project execution progresses.

RELOCATION ASSISTANCE

The local public agency or other public body responsible for displacement through urban renewal, code enforcement, open-space land acquisition, or demolition activities is required to offer individuals and families displaced by its actions, decent, safe, and sanitary housing at prices and rents within their means. (See Housing Assistance Programs below for relocation housing aids.) In addition, the responsible body is required to provide relocation assistance to business concerns and nonprofit organizations.

Relocation Grants.

Grants are made available to communities to reimburse individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations displaced by urban renewal, or the other governmental activities listed above, for their moving expenses and direct losses of property. Each property owner may be entitled to an additional relocation payment for certain settlement and other costs incidental to the conveyance of real property to the project.

Payments to families and individuals may not exceed $200 for moving costs and property loss. In addition, families and elderly individuals displaced on and after January 27, 1964, may receive a relocation adjustment payment of up to $500 to assist them in relocating in standard accommodations.

Each business concern or nonprofit organization is entitled to receive moving expenses and reimbursement for property loss incurred in the move, up to $3,000. If no property loss is claimed, reimbursement for moving expenses can be made up to a maximum of $25,000. Such payments are covered in full by a Federal relocation grant made to the appropriate local agency. If the moving expenses of a business concern exceed $25,000, the locality may elect to reimburse the excess costs through a local cash payment which will be shared by the Federal Government through a relocation grant in the same percentage as other project costs.

Each business concern with average annual gross receipts in excess of $1,500 and average annual net earnings of less than $10,000 may be eligible for a Small Business Displacement Payment from the local agency.

Small Business Loans.

The Small Business Administration is authorized to make loans of up to 20 years to assist a small business concern in reestablishing its business, if the concern has suffered substantial economic injury as a result of its displacement by an urban renewal project, a Federal highway construction program, or any other construction conducted or financed by the Federal Government.

SBA may also assist displaced eligible small business concerns who desire to rent modern, up-to-date premises by guaranteeing the payment of rentals.

Each business concern eligible for a Small Business Loan is so informed by the local renewal agency, and put in touch with the local SBA office which will provide appropriate technical and financial assistance.

PLANNING FOR URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

There are two types of planning which a community may undertake with Federal assistance in preparation for urban renewal activities--general neighborhood renewal planning and specific project planning.

General Neighborhood Renewal Planning.

This type of planning is undertaken when an area to be renewed is of such size that urban renewal activities in the area may have to be initiated in stages over a period of as long as eight years, and it is desirable that a preliminary plan for the entire area be prepared as the basis for proceeding with specific urban renewal projects. General Neighborhood Renewal Plans may be prepared for an urban renewal area or areas, together with any adjoining areas having specifically related problems. The costs of such general neighborhood planning can be met by Federal advances repayable out of funds that become available for execution of the renewal projects.

Specific Project Planning.

Planning in relation to a particular project is concerned with such matters as eligibility and feasibility, boundaries of the renewal area, proposed new land uses, and preparations for relocation, land acquisition, rehabilitation and conservation, site clearance and improvement, land disposition, and other necessary operations. The expenses of such planning may be defrayed through Federal planning advances that are repayable from funds that become available when the project is undertaken.

COMMUNITY RENEWAL PROGRAMS

Federal grants are available to pay up to two-thirds of the cost incurred in preparing a Community Renewal Program covering the full range of urban renewal action required to meet local needs. This permits a community to approach its problems of blight on a citywide, rather than on a piecemeal, basis. All the deteriorated and deteriorating areas of the city can be identified and classified as to the relative urgency and degree of urban renewal action needed. The locality's resources for taking urban renewal action--for financing, relocating displaced families, utilizing cleared land, and meeting other program requirements--can be established. Then the community can lay out a long-range program for urban renewal including provision of related public improvements, with its total needs balanced against total resources. It can establish and maintain feasible priorities and schedules for the various types of activities required to carry out its program.

OTHER URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAMS

Urban Planning Assistance (including Comprehensive Transportation Planning).

The Urban Planning Assistance Program encourages and assists comprehensive planning for entire urban areas having common or related urban development problems to help prevent the spread of urban blight and to accelerate sound planning for the orderly growth and development of our urban areas.

Sometimes called the "701 Program" because it is authorized by Section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, as amended, the program makes possible Federal grants to supplement State and local funds for the purpose of financing timely, comprehensive planning. The planning includes, but is not limited to, comprehensive land use planning to guide residential, commercial, and industrial expansion, and planning the general location of transportation and other facilities, such as schools, sewer, water, and recreational facilities, for the area's growing requirements.

The 701 Program recognizes the integral relationship of the planning of coordinated mass transportation systems to comprehensive planning for the development and renewal of entire urban areas. In the preparation of a comprehensive plan and related surveys and studies for an urban area, the general location, character, and extent of routes and terminals are eligible activities.

In general, Federal grants for planning assistance are made for cities and other municipalities with a population of less than 50,000, groups of adjacent communities with a total population of less than 50,000, and counties regardless of population size. Localities may apply for these grants through their State planning agencies or properly authorized metropolitan or regional planning agencies.

For metropolitan areas and urban regions with central city or urban concentration of 50,000 or more, Federal grants may be made either to a State planning agency or to an official metropolitan or regional planning agency authorized to perform planning in the area. Applications may be made directly to the HUD Regional Office or to the State agency.

Grants are also available for State and interstate comprehensive planning and for planning in disaster areas, in areas experiencing the impact of the establishment or expansion of a Federal installation or a loss of employment as the result of a reduction in Federal purchases or the closing of a Federal installation, in Indian reservations, and in certain areas designated as redevelopment areas under the Area Redevelopment Act or successor legislation.

Normally, the Federal share is two-thirds of the total cost of an urban planning project. However, for localities situated in redevelopment areas designated under the Area Redevelopment Act or successor legislation, and in areas where there has been a substantial reduction in employment as the result of a reduction in Federal purchases or the closing of a Federal installation, grants may amount to three-fourths of the project cost.

In addition, grants of up to three-fourths may be made to State Planning Agencies participating in planning for Appalachian regional programs, for expenses incurred in the course of such planning, or to the Appalachian Regional Commission.

Under a 1965 amendment to Section 701, two-thirds grants may be made to organizations composed of public officials who are representative of the political jurisdictions within a metropolitan area or urban region. These grants are for the purpose of assisting such organizations to undertake studies, collect data, develop regional plans and programs, and engage in other activities which are necessary or desirable for the solution of metropolitan or regional problems in such areas or regions. Applications should be made directly to HUD Regional Offices.

Local and State sources must provide the balance in all instances.

Open Space Land.

Federal grants of up to 50 percent are authorized to help communities provide, preserve, and develop lands having value for park and recreation, conservation, scenic, or historic uses. Examples of eligible development costs are landscaping, basic water and sanitary facilities, and recreation facilities. Major construction, such as large buildings and amphitheaters, is ineligible.

Developed land in built-up portions of urban areas may be purchased with grant assistance where adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through the use of existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land. Where land is in a built-up area, the grants may include 50 percent of the cost of acquisition and necessary clearance. Relocation assistance, including payments, is authorized for individuals, families, businesses, and nonprofit organizations displaced by the purchase of land with grant assistance.

Urban Beautification.

Federal grants are available to assist communities in carrying out local beautification programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas. The grant may represent up to 50 percent of the applicant's increase in its usual beautification expenditures over and above previous years for comparable activities.

Code Enforcement Programs.

In 1965 Congress authorized financial assistance for code enforcement activities on a new and simplified basis. Federal grants are available to cities, counties, and municipalities to cover part of the cost of "Concentrated Code Enforcement Programs" in designated areas of the locality.

A code enforcement grant may not exceed two-thirds (or three-fourths in the case of a municipality or county having a population of 50,000 or less) of the cost of a Concentrated Code Enforcement Program. Eligible costs may include expenditures for code administration, for related staff services in connection with providing assistance on relocation and on direct Federal rehabilitation loans and grants, and for the provision and repair of necessary streets, curbs, sidewalks, street lighting, tree planting, and similar improvements.

The amount of a code enforcement grant will be based on a code enforcement program budget, submitted by the municipality and subject to HUD approval, and on a final audit of program costs. Grant payments will be made periodically, based on requisitions submitted by the municipality and on reports of progress of code enforcement activities and the provision of needed public improvements in a designated area. A single application for grant may cover more than one area in the municipality, providing it is reasonable to expect completion of the code enforcement program for all areas covered by the application within three years.

The general policies and requirements applicable to a federally assisted code enforcement program are:

1. At the time of the approval of its application, the municipality must have a Workable Program for Community Improvement currently in effect and must have adopted a comprehensive system of codes that meets certain minimum standards and is being effectively enforced.

2. The municipality must agree that, during the period it is under a Contract for Code Enforcement Grant, it will maintain a level of expenditures for code enforcement, exclusive of any code enforcement expenditures for areas assisted by urban renewal project grants or code enforcement grants, that is at least as much as normal expenditures for code enforcement activities before execution of the contract.

3. The municipality must have a satisfactory program for providing all necessary public improvements within the area assisted by the grant.

4. The municipality has an obligation to assure that any individuals or families who are displaced by the code enforcement activities are offered decent, safe, and sanitary housing within their means, and to provide related relocation assistance.

The area selected for the Concentrated Code Enforcement Program must be built up, predominantly residential in character, and with code violations existing in at least 20% of the buildings in the area. Conditions in the area must be such that the proposed program for concentrated code enforcement and the provision of the proposed public improvements may be expected to eliminate code violations and arrest the decline of the area.

Demolition Grants.

Another new program authorized in 1965 is for Federal grants to cities, other municipalities, and counties to assist in financing the cost of demolishing structures which, under State or local law, have been determined to be structurally unsound or unfit for human living, and which the locality has authority to demolish. Under the legislation, the demolition must be on a planned neighborhood basis and further the overall renewal objectives of the locality. In addition, a program of enforcement of existing local housing and related codes must be currently underway in the locality. Grants may be made for up to two-thirds of the cost of demolition.

In order to be eligible for a grant, the locality must have a currently certified Workable Program for Community Improvement and the structures to be demolished must constitute a public nuisance and a serious hazard to the public health or welfare. In addition, the governing body of the municipality must determine that other available legal procedures to secure remedial action by the owners of the structures involved have been exhausted and that demolition by governmental action is required.

The locality will be obligated to assure that any individuals or families displaced as a result of the federally assisted demolition are offered decent, safe, and sanitary housing. Relocation payments on the same basis as in Title I urban renewal project activities must also be made.

Urban Renewal Demonstration Grant Program.

Grants up to two-thirds of the cost of undertaking demonstration projects, plus the full cost of reports of such projects, are available to public bodies. A demonstration project may include the development and testing of new or improved techniques or methods of blight prevention and elimination, together with an analysis and report of those activities. Reports of completed demonstration projects and similar activities are published to help guide renewal programs in other cities.

Urban Renewal Service.

HUD provides an Urban Renewal Service, which makes available technical and other professional assistance to communities in the preparation and development of their renewal plans and programs, including rehabilitation projects not requiring Federal financial assistance and self-liquidating redevelopment projects. The Service also covers the publication and dissemination of technical and advisory materials for the information and guidance of local public agencies and others concerned with urban renewal.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Financing of new housing and the rehabilitation of existing structures must come primarily from private investment. Redevelopment or conservation of slum and blighted areas, as well as other public improvements, often displaces families, many of whom do not have the means to obtain adequate housing in the normal private market. The law requires that there be provided decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings available to people displaced from urban renewal areas, at rents or prices within their means. While some displaced families may be rehoused in low-rent public housing, the bulk of the rehousing resources will be privately owned. Another large area of housing need is accommodations for low and moderate income families generally. The housing assistance programs of HUD and its constituents are designed to meet both these needs in the following manner:

Rehabilitation Loans.

The Housing Act of 1964, as amended, authorizes government loans to owners or tenants of residential or business property in urban renewal or code enforcement areas to enable them to bring the structures up to local code requirements, or to carry out the objectives of the official urban renewal plan for the area.

Interest rates on rehabilitation loans are limited to 3 percent, and loans may have a term of not more than 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the structure after rehabilitation, whichever is less. These loans will be made only when the borrower is unable to secure the necessary funds from other sources on comparable terms and conditions.

Rehabilitation Grants.

Federal grants are available to qualified low-income owner-occupants of housing in an urban renewal or code enforcement area for the repair and improvement of their homes so that the property conforms to applicable codes or other requirements of the urban renewal plan.

The maximum rehabilitation grant that may be made is $1,500. Within this limit, the grant may not exceed:

(1) If the applicant's annual income is $3,000 or less, the actual cost of the repairs and improvements.

(2) If the applicant's annual income exceeds $3,000, an amount not in excess of that portion of the actual cost of repairs and improvements which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized as part of the applicant's monthly housing expense without requiring that expense to exceed 25 % of the applicant's monthly income.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Preference for admission to new or existing low-rent public housing is provided by law for individuals and families of low income displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action. The Department of Housing and Urban Development can contract to make development loans and pay annual subsidies for public housing projects. upon application of a local housing authority, and with the approval and cooperation of the local government.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Congress has provided more liberal FHA mortgage insurance to assist in the elimination of slums and urban blight; the rehabilitation and conservation of existing properties and neighborhoods; and the provision of new and rehabilitated sales and rental housing both for families displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action and families of low and moderate income. These provisions are incorporated in two Sections of the National Housing Act, Sections 220 and 221.

mortgage insurance in urban renewal areas

Section 220 provides special mortgage insurance assistance in urban renewal areas which have been certified to FHA by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. It may be used to assist in financing the rehabilitation of existing salvable housing, through the refinancing of an existing mortgage, plus the cost of home improvements. It may also be used to assist in financing new sales or rental housing, in single or multi-family structures, in certified areas.

Certain nondwelling facilities, consistent with the Urban Renewal Plan, may be included in a Section 220 insured mortgage when the insured project is predominantly residential and the FHA Commissioner finds that nondwelling facilities included in the mortgage contribute to the economic feasibility of the insured project.

Section 220(h) provides specifically for FHA-insured home improvement loans on properties in urban renewal project areas. These loans bear interest at not more than 6 percent. Term of maturity may be up to 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the property, whichever is less. These insured loans are reviewed and processed in FHA Field Insuring Offices on a relatively simplified basis.

Also provided is insurance on loans for public improvements for which a homeowner is legally liable.

mortgage insurance for displaced families

Section 221 authorizes FHA to insure mortgages on new or rehabilitated housing for sale or rent to families or elderly and handicapped individuals displaced from urban renewal areas or by other governmental action causing displacement, such as the construction of schools, highways, or other public improvements.

Mortgage insurance is available for new homes, and for the purchase and repair of existing homes, containing from one to four units. Down payments are $200 per dwelling unit for displaced purchasers, which may include legal fees and other items contained in closing costs.

Section 221 also provides liberal terms for the purchase of new or existing houses and the repair of housing by any low or moderate income family.

Under Section 221(d)(3), a below-market, or low-interest rate, rental housing program for displaced families, other low and moderate income families, and elderly or handicapped individuals is provided. The mortgage financing for a new or rehabilitated rental housing project shall bear an interest rate not to exceed 3%. Such mortgages are available in communities having a Workable Program for Community Improvement, certified by the Secretary, and may be obtained by nonprofit corporations, limited dividend corporations, and co-operatives, or other mortgagors whose rents, charges, and operations are regulated by the FHA Commissioner. Public agencies that are not receiving financial assistance for public housing exclusively are also eligible.

Other FHA programs have proven useful in connection with urban renewal. They are Section 213 for the financing of management type co-operative housing and Section 231, which provides special terms for housing for the elderly or handicapped. Section 203(k), enacted in 1961, provides home improvement loans, in amounts up to $10,000 per dwelling unit, at an interest rate not more than 6 percent, for the improvement of homes outside of urban renewal project areas. These loans may be for terms of up to 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the property, whichever is less, and do not require the refinancing of existing mortgages on property.

Rent Supplement Program.

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 authorizes a rent supplement program which may be utilized as an aid to the relocation of certain site occupants displaced by urban renewal and other public programs.

To be eligible, an occupant must be an individual or family with an income not higher than the maximum amount established in the area for occupancy of low-rent public housing and, in additional, must be in one of the following categories:

1. Displaced by governmental action.
2. 62 years of age or older.
3. Physically handicapped.
4. Occupying substandard housing.
5. Occupying, or formerly occupying, a dwelling situated in an area determined by the Small Business Administration, subsequent to April 1, 1965, to have been affected by a natural disaster, and which has been extensively damaged or destroyed as a result of the disaster.

The amount of rent supplement payment cannot exceed the difference between the fair market rental for the dwelling unit and 25 percent of the occupant's income. Payments will be reviewed periodically and adjusted to reflect changes in income or rent.

Housing owners who are eligible to enter into contracts to receive rent supplement payments will be nonprofit, cooperative, or limited dividend owners who provide housing financed with mortgages insured by FHA under Section 221(d)(3) at market interest rates. Such housing can consist of a project of 5 or more dwelling units which may be individual dwelling units, row houses, semi-detached housing, or multifamily housing. The housing must be either new housing or housing that is improved by a substantial amount of rehabilitation financed by the insured mortgage.

In addition, rent supplements are available on a restricted and experimental basis for housing financed with mortgages insured by FHA under its Section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate program for low- or moderate-income families and for housing for the elderly financed with a direct Federal loan under Section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 or under the FHA Section 231 mortgage insurance program for rental housing for the elderly. However, not more than 10 percent of the amounts approved in annual appropriation acts for the rent supplement program may be utilized for the experimental program, of which half may be used for housing provided under the FHA below-market program and half for housing under the elderly direct loan program and the FHA elderly program.

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Under its special assistance programs, FNMA is authorized to support FHA Section 220 and certain types of Section 221 housing, including all housing for eligible displaced families, by purchasing and making advance commitments to purchase such mortgages.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Disaster Areas.

Special Federal assistance is available for disaster areas. An area that is in need of redevelopment or rehabilitation as a result of a catastrophe which the President has declared to be a major disaster may be extended urban renewal assistance without regard to certain laws and regulations governing regular urban renewal projects. Special provision for such areas is also made under the Urban Planning Assistance Program, discussed above.

Redevelopment Areas.

Special Federal assistance in urban renewal and urban planning is available for areas of substantial and persistent unemployment that have been designated as redevelopment areas by the Secretary of Commerce under the Area Redevelopment Act, or successor legislation.

Educational Institutions and Hospitals.

Special benefits are available to an urban renewal project which is located near the principal buildings or a major branch of an educational institution or hospital. These projects are not subject to certain requirements governing regular urban renewal projects. Furthermore, expenditures by eligible donors for land acquisition, demolition, and relocation may be credited to the required local share of the cost of these projects. This reduces the amount of other local grants-in-aid which the locality would have to provide for its urban renewal program.

Chicago skyline adds a new dimension for M.S.

John Hancock Center, a 100-story combination apartment and office building, must first go down to bedrock before it finally soars to its planned 1,100 ft.

Model "stands in" for 100-story John Hancock Center, which will rise almost as high as the Empire State building.

Long augers, some 12 ft. in diameter, churn into the earth as construction crew tackles tricky caisson-drilling job.

Behind a mud-spattered fence on Chicago's elegant North Michigan Avenue, two rain-coated workers descend a 140-ft. shaft to chip away at fractured limestone. Above, giant augers bite into earth. Cranes with 160-ft. booms heft 120-ft.-long tubes and twist them into rock.

This week, a 50-man crew from Case Foundation Co. began putting in the last of 237 monster caissons that will hold up a 384-million-lb. colossus—the highly publicized, 100-story John Hancock Center. Pouring of the final caisson late next month will end the first stage of one of the most spectacular construction projects since completion of the Empire State building in 1931.

Chicago's pride. Financed by John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., developed by Washington builder-sportsman Jerry Wolman, to be built by Tishman Construction Co., the $95-million combination apartment-office building is scheduled to top 1,100 ft. just 26 months from now. Elsewhere, other combination apartment-office buildings are going up, but none is so large as Chicago's Hancock.

With two 344-ft. TV antennas, the 2.8-million-sq.-ft. tower will soar to within 23 ft. of Manhattan's Empire State. To go that high, it must first go down to bedrock—140 ft. to 190 ft. down—in caissons that are the largest ever used for a building.

Tricky job. The $2-million caisson job began eight months ago. "Every hole is a tiger," says Tishman Vice-President Mike Oppenheim.

In drilling caissons up to 10 ft. across to bedrock, crews have to cut away soapstone not stable enough to support the Hancock. Operations start with a 12-ft.-diameter auger on a 100-ft. drill rig that "muds out" a hole by applying 5-million-in.-lb. of thrust.

At 35 ft., clay begins to come up, and a topper cylinder is dropped in to prevent cave-ins. Bits are changed, and an 8-ft. shaft begins to go through a water-bearing hardpan seam 90 ft. below. Water is pumped in to prevent blowouts as drilling proceeds through silt to 130 ft.

A crane grabs a 72-ton core barrel cylinder complete with metal teeth welded to its edge, hoists the 120-ft. tube in the air, and drops it to soapstone. Coring begins when a "Kelly"—a long shaft to which an auger is attached—is hooked to the core barrel, slowly twisting the 72-ton cylinder into the rock.

Twisted to bedrock, the core forms the hole and encloses miners who go down to muck out boulders, break up the soapstone, and send it to the top. Concrete is poured in to the 80-ft. level. A steel cage tops off the caisson, which gets a concrete cap and a 10-in.-thick steel plate.

'Eggcrate' base. Within two months, Tishman hopes to complete an 11-ft.-deep "eggcrate"—a superstructure of girders connecting each caisson. The substructure, filled with sand and concrete, will support a building that in effect will be a steel bridge turned on end.

Unlike other buildings held up mostly by interior columns, columnless Hancock will get its support only from its walls and a central core.

Construction textbook. The 15-month job of putting up 42,000 tons of steel will begin in July, less than a year and a half after architects Skidmore, Owings & Merrill got the design assignment. Creeper cranes with 80-ft. booms on the building's four corners will lift the girders into place, then crawl up the frame to the next level as they complete a floor every two-and-a-half days.

A year from now, the building will be a "construction textbook," says Oppenheim. Tradesmen will be putting in trim and plumbing on the eighth floor, while bronze aluminum curtain wall goes up on 19, concrete floors go in on 26, and girders rise on 32. An army of 1,500 workers will work its way up the building.

Core barrels are twisted into the bedrock to form holes for caissons.

Miner goes down shaft to muck out boulders and break up soapstone.

Construction site on North Michigan Avenue teems with activity as crews move cranes, drill rigs, and giant augers, and assemble steel core barrels.

Latest building trend puts apartments and offices in the same skyscraper

"Living over the store" is losing its old stigma, and is fast becoming a status symbol, as the latest trend in downtown real estate—the mulit-purpose building—shows.

Chicago's 100-story John Hancock Center (left) is the biggest and most spectacular example. But smaller versions of the office building-apartment combination, and a half-dozen other combinations as well, are up or rising in New York, San Francisco, New Orleans, Miami, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Dallas. Others are definitely under way for Milwaukee and Toronto, and in the talking stage for Boston, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, and San Diego. St. Paul and other cities have written provisions for such structures into their redevelopment programs.

Modern concept. "The problems arising from soaring population growth and intensive concentration of business headquarters in a few giant metropolitan areas has generated a broad-scale reevaluation of living and working concepts," explains Robert V. Tishman, president of Tishman Realty & Construction Co., Inc., builder of John Hancock Center. "The combination residential and office skyscraper offers a style of working and living that meets modern attitudes, tastes and needs for speed, convenience, comfort, and economy," he points out. "Other combinations meet other needs."

Some of the "other combinations" include Tishman's own office building atop a post office, now rising on New York's east side; a motor inn over an office structure in Pittsburgh; apartments perched on a medical center in New York; and a middle-income apartment building topping a school in the Bronx.

One-stop living. The "living over the store" concept may prove the best way yet devised to avoid downtown traffic and commuter woes. One of the latest disciples is Edwin Andrew Goodman, who will head the full-scale Chicago branch of New York's posh Bergdorf Goodman. The store will occupy the first five floors of John Hancock Center. Ninety floors above, Goodman will occupy a custom-built, duplex apartment, and will commute to work by high-speed elevator.

Multipurpose building—where tenants can work, live, and play—is a haven for fugitives from commuting.

Residents of St. Louis' Mansion House, a downtown complex covering four city blocks, will be able to buy groceries, have their cars serviced or their hair cut, attend religious services, dine out, and go to work—without leaving the premises.

Before yearend, executives with business in New Orleans' 45-story Plaza Tower will be able to land on its rooftop helistop, sleep in one of its luxurious apartments, visit its offices, relax at its health club, swim in its pool, dine in its restaurant, and fly away without ever setting foot on New Orleans' streets.

Another office-apartment combo in New Orleans, the 17-story Continental Center being built by oilman Joseph Rault, Jr., has leased most of its office space to oil companies, many of whom have also leased apartments for the use of visiting executives.

Cost-space factor. If any single factor may be said to dominate this new trend, it is the economic realities of urban real estate. Prime, downtown space is scarce and expensive. In some cities, developers fear that the market cannot absorb a high-rise building that is all commercial or all residential. Since they must build high to justify the cost of the land, the combination building that serves more than one market is a practical solution.

That's why Ferre Florida Corp. built the 30-story Biscayne Tower as an office-apartment combo in the heart of downtown Miami. "Property is extremely valuable in downtown Miami and will become more valuable in the years to come," explains Maurice Ferre, son of the principal. "But right now it is too risky to trust in a building with only apartments or offices. So we decided on a combination."

The same type of hedge-betting is behind the final blueprint for the new headquarters building of the Catholic Knights Insurance Society in Milwaukee. The society wanted a prestigious high-rise building, but didn't want to gamble on renting that much office space in a rundown section on the fringe of the downtown area.

Philadelphia builder Sylvester Lowery, who built that city's Penn Towers—now owned by Pennsylvania RR—cites high land costs and restrictive zoning as his prime reasons for the combination. A purely residential building couldn't have carried the cost, he says.

Richard F. Kirschman, project director at San Francisco's multi-use Fox Plaza, insists this complex is designed to fill two real needs in the area: apartments for the 40,000 people who work in the nearby Civic Center, and offices for businessmen who deal with government officials in the center. The plaza's shopping mall also offers a pleasant spot for lunchtime browsing.

Pittsburgh developer Harry W. Shepard, Jr., adds one more amenity to his projects: the enclosed, overstreet bridge to nearby department stores. His Allegheny Tower, now nearing completion in Pittsburgh, features one such bridge. And Milwaukee Tower, another Shepard venture in the planning stage, will cross over to the Boston Store at three levels.

Manhattan Cliffs. New York claims the first high-rise office-apartment in the U. S. Nassoit-Sulzberger & Co., Inc., opened a 21-story structure on Gotham's east side in January, 1962, in the midst of an apartment boom. Street noises made lower floor apartments unattractive, recalls Edward Sulzberger; so three floors of office space, with a separate entrance, was the answer. A second east side combo, Plaza Tower, opened late in 1964.

Since then, tenants have begun to move into New York's most prestigious office-apartment, Alcoa's United Nations Plaza—two 38-story cooperative apartment towers atop six floors of office space, overlooking the East River and the United Nations complex. The U. N. itself, which occupies one entire floor, is the prime commercial tenant. However, only a handful of office tenants have purchased apartments, which cost up to $160,000.

At least three more combos are rising in Manhattan: the 47-story Excelsior, which will be New York's tallest apartment building; the 24-story Carlton Regency, which will house the Pack Medical Foundation, including a basement cobalt room with 20-in. thick concrete walls; and Tishman's post office-office building.

Late next year, construction will begin on a three-story public school in the Bronx. Above the school, utilizing air rights, will be a 25-story apartment building. Youngsters may go to school without crossing streets.

SUMMARY OF THE Urban Renewal Program

Incorporating changes resulting from the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Act of 1966

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

"The Federal program of urban renewal is today our principal instrument for restoring the hope and renewing the vitality of older cities and wornout neighborhoods."

President Lyndon B. Johnson

(Incorporating Changes Resulting From the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966)

Urban Renewal is the term used to describe the diversified efforts by localities, with the assistance of the Federal Government, for the elimination and prevention of slums and blight, whether residential or nonresidential, and the removal of the factors that create slums and blighting conditions. In the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, as well as in other legislation, Congress has enacted a number of provisions which include loans, grants, technical assistance, and special mortgage insurance in urban renewal areas. Taken together they represent a "kit of tools" making possible a partnership among local governments, private enterprise, citizens, and the Federal Government in mounting an offensive against slums and the causes of urban blight.

Urban Renewal is a local program—locally conceived, planned, and executed. It is a concerted effort by a community, through its public and private resources, to prevent and correct urban blight and decay and to set in motion long-range, planned redevelopment of both residential and nonresidential neighborhoods. It has two main elements: (1) Slum prevention through neighborhood conservation and rehabilitation of structures. (2) Clearance and redevelopment of structures and neighborhoods.

Urban renewal projects are planned and carried out by a local public agency, which, depending on State law, may be a separate public agency, a local housing authority, or a department of a city government.

Federal assistance is available to help the community carry out its plan when local resources alone are not adequate to do the job. To qualify for Federal assistance to an urban renewal project, a community must adopt, and have certified by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development a Workable Program for Community Improvement, in which it commits itself to the attainment of certain objectives.

Through the requirement of a Workable Program for Community Improvement, urban renewal projects are tied to a broad and systematic effort to eliminate blight and prevent its recurrence through (1) codes and ordinances, (2) a comprehensive community plan, (3) neighborhood analyses, (4) administrative organization, (5) financing the program, (6) housing for displaced families, and (7) citizen participation.

HOW THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT HELPS

Federal assistance is available to help a community carry out the related major phases of a comprehensive urban renewal program. These aids include:

- Grand assistance for the preparation of full-range renewal programs on a community-wide basis, including the identification of needs, estimates of financial, rehousing and other resources, and development of tentative schedules.
- Financial aid in planning and carrying out urban renewal projects involving the rebuilding or conservation of blighted and deteriorating urban areas. This assistance is provided for specific projects and for planning general neighborhood areas to be renewed over a period of years.
- Grant assistance to cities, other municipalities, and counties for carrying out programs of concentrated code enforcement in deteriorated or deteriorating areas, outside of urban renewal project areas. Grants may be authorized only for areas in which code enforcement, together with public improvements provided by the locality, may be expected to arrest the decline of the area.
- Special FHA financing aids for new or rehabilitated housing in the redevelopment of urban renewal or code enforcement project areas.

- Special FHA financial aids and public housing assistance to provide low-cost private or public housing for families displaced by urban renewal or other public activities.
- Grant assistance to cities, municipalities, and counties to assist in financing the cost of demolishing structures which, under State or local law, have been determined to be structurally unsound or unfit for human habitation.
- Grant assistance to localities to develop neighborhood facilities for programs of community service.
- Grant assistance to communities to help provide, preserve, and develop lands having value for park and recreation, conservation, scenic or historic uses.
- Grant assistance to communities in carrying out local beautification programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas.
- Grant assistance to communities for historic and architectural preservation.

The following sections give in summary the main facts about these various kinds of Federal assistance.

URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

AN URBAN RENEWAL PROJECT MAY INVOLVE:

- Acquiring and clearing a slum or blighted area—either residential or nonresidential—and disposing of the land for redevelopment in accordance with planned uses.
- Rehabilitation of structures in such an area by property owners, accompanied by improvement of community facilities by the local government, resulting in conservation of the area.
- Any combination of the above.

EXECUTION OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Project execution activities may include land acquisition, temporary operation of acquired property, relocation of site occupants, demolition work, installation of project improvements, rehabilitation, conservation, and code enforcement activities, land disposition activities, and relocation of historic structures.

FINANCING URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

An urban renewal project is financed by an arrangement between the local public agency and the Federal Government which calls for local contributions, Federal advances and loans, and ultimately a Federal capital grant.

The locality's contribution may take the form of cash or noncash grants-in-aid, such as donations of land, demolition and removal work, project improvements, certain expenditures by colleges, universities, and hospitals, or public facilities.

Net project cost, or loss, for purposes of determining the amount of the Federal grant, is the total of expenditures for project execution activities plus the value of local noncash grants-in-aid, less the proceeds from land disposition.

Capital Grants

An urban renewal capital grant covers the Federal share of net project cost. The percentage of a capital grant varies, depending on size of the community and other factors:

- For any municipality having a population of 50,000 or less, or a municipality situated in a labor market area designated as a redevelopment area under the Area Development Act or successor legislation, the Federal contribution is three-fourths of net project cost.

- For any other municipality, the Federal contribution is two-thirds of net project cost. In these communities, the Federal share may be three-fourths if the locality elects to exclude from project cost certain local administrative, survey, and planning expenses.

Advances and Loans

Federal advances and loans may be made to finance project planning and provide working capital for execution activities.

- Planning Advances. Funds may be advanced to finance surveys and planning work necessary before actual operations of the project.
- Temporary Loans. These Federal loans are used by the community as working capital in acquiring land and structures in the project area, clearing the site, preparing the area for redevelopment or conservation, and all other execution activities. The contract with the Federal Government may be used by the local public agency to secure private financing at lower interest rates than the Federal rate.
- Other Financing. Federal capital grant progress payments, local cash grants-in-aid, and land disposition proceeds may be used to provide temporary financing as project execution progresses.

RELOCATION ASSISTANCE

The local public agency or other public body responsible for displacement through urban renewal, code enforcement, open-space land acquisition, or demolition activities is required to offer individuals and families displaced by its actions, decent, safe, and sanitary housing at prices and rents within their means. (See Housing Assistance Programs below for relocation housing aids.) In addition, the responsible body is required to provide relocation assistance to business concerns and nonprofit organizations.

Relocation Grants

Grants are made available to communities to reimburse individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations displaced by urban renewal, or the other governmental activities listed above, for their moving expenses and direct losses of property. Each property owner may be entitled to an additional relocation payment for certain settlement and other costs incidental to the conveyance of real property to the project.

Payments to families and individuals may not exceed $200 for moving costs and property loss. In addition, families and elderly individuals displaced on and after January 27, 1964, may receive a relocation adjustment payment of up to $500 to assist them in relocating in standard accommodations.

Each business concern or nonprofit organization is entitled to receive moving expenses and reimbursement for property loss incurred in the move, up to $3,000. If no property loss is claimed, reimbursement for moving expenses can be made up to a maximum of $25,000. Such payments are covered in full by a Federal relocation grant made to the appropriate local agency. If the moving expenses of a business concern exceed $25,000, the locality may elect to reimburse the excess costs through a local cash payment which will be shared by the Federal Government through a relocation grant in the same percentage as other project costs.

Each business concern with average annual gross receipts in excess of $1,500 and average annual net earnings of less than $10,000 may be eligible for a Small Business Displacement Payment from the local agency.

240-837 O-67-2

Small Business Loans

The Small Business Administration is authorized to make loans of up to 20 years to assist a small business concern in reestablishing its business, if the concern has suffered substantial economic injury as a result of its displacement by an urban renewal project, a Federal highway construction program, or any other construction conducted or financed by the Federal Government.

SBA may also assist displaced eligible small business concerns who desire to rent modern, up-to-date premises by guaranteeing the payment of rentals.

Each business concern eligible for a Small Business Loan is so informed by the local renewal agency, and put in touch with the local SBA office which will provide appropriate technical and financial assistance.

PLANNING FOR URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

There are two types of planning which a community may undertake with Federal assistance in preparation for urban renewal activities—general neighborhood renewal planning and specific project planning.

General Neighborhood Renewal Planning

This type of planning is undertaken when an area to be renewed is of such size that urban renewal activities in the area may have to be initiated in stages over a period of as long as eight years, and it is desirable that a preliminary plan for the entire area be prepared as the basis for proceeding with specific urban renewal projects. General Neighborhood Renewal Plans may be prepared for an urban renewal area or areas, together with any adjoining areas having specifically related problems. The costs of such general neighborhood planning can be met by Federal advances repayable out of funds that become available for execution of the renewal projects.

Specific Project Planning

Planning in relation to a particular project is concerned with such matters as eligibility and feasibility, boundaries of the renewal area, proposed new land uses, and preparations for relocation, land acquisition, rehabilitation and conservation, historic and architectural preservation, site clearance and improvement, land disposition, and other necessary operations. The expenses of such planning may be defrayed through Federal planning advances that are repayable from funds that become available when the project is undertaken.

COMMUNITY RENEWAL PROGRAMS

Federal grants are available to pay up to two-thirds of the cost incurred in preparing a Community Renewal Program covering the full range of urban renewal action required to meet local needs. This permits a community to approach its problems of blight on a citywide, rather than on a piecemeal, basis. All the deteriorated and deteriorating areas of the city can be identified and classified as to the relative urgency and degree of urban renewal action needed. The locality's resources for taking urban renewal action—for financing, relocating displaced families, utilizing cleared land, and meeting other program requirements—can be established. Then the community can lay out a long-range program for urban renewal including provision of related public improvements, with its total needs balanced against total resources. It can establish and maintain feasible priorities and schedules for the various types of activities required to carry out its program.

Open Space Land

Federal grants of up to 50 percent are authorized to help communities provide, preserve, and develop lands having value for park and recreation, conservation, scenic, or historic uses. Examples of eligible development costs are landscaping, basic water and sanitary facilities, and recreation facilities. Major construction, such as large buildings and amphitheaters, is ineligible.

Developed land in built-up portions of urban areas may be purchased with grant assistance where adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through the use of existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land. Where land is in a built-up area, the grants may include 50 percent of the cost of acquisition and necessary clearance. Relocation assistance, including payments, is authorized for individuals, families, businesses, and non-profit organizations displaced by the purchase of land with grant assistance.

Urban Beautification

Federal grants are available to assist communities in carrying out local beautification programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas. The grant may represent up to 50 percent of the applicant's increase in its usual beautification expenditures over and above previous years for comparable activities.

Historic Preservation

Federal grants of up to 50 percent are authorized to help communities preserve properties and areas of historic or architectural value. This includes both acquisition and restoration of properties in urban areas provided that such properties will be maintained for historic purposes and will be for public use and benefit. Projects assisted under this program must be in accord with the comprehensive planning program of the community.

Code Enforcement Programs

In 1965 Congress authorized financial assistance for code enforcement activities on a new and simplified basis. Federal grants are available to cities, counties, and municipalities to cover part of the cost of "Concentrated Code Enforcement Programs" in designated areas of the locality.

A code enforcement grant may not exceed two-third (or three-fourths in the case of a municipality or county having a population of 50,000 or less) of the cost of a Concentrated Code Enforcement Program. Eligible costs may include expenditures for code administration, for related staff services in connection with providing assistance on relocation and on direct Federal rehabilitation loans and grants, and for the provision and repair of necessary streets, curbs, sidewalks, street lighting, tree planting, and similar improvements.

The amount of a code enforcement grant will be based on a code enforcement program budget, submitted by the municipality and subject to HUD approval, and on a final audit of program costs. Grant payments will be made periodically, based on requisitions submitted by the municipality and on reports of progress of code enforcement activities and the provision of needed public improvements in a designated area. A single grant application may cover more than one area in the municipality, providing it is reasonable to expect completion of the code enforcement program for all areas covered by the application within three years. The general policies and requirements applicable to a federally assisted code enforcement program are:

1. At the time of the approval of its application, the municipality must have a Workable Program for Community Improvement currently in effect and must have adopted a comprehensive system of codes that meets certain minimum standards and which is being effectively enforced.

2. The municipality must agree that, during the period it is under a Contract for Code Enforcement Grant, it will maintain a level of expenditures for code enforcement, exclusive of any code enforcement expenditures for areas assisted by urban renewal project grants or code enforcement grants, that is not less than normal expenditures for code enforcement activities prior to the execution of the contract.
3. The municipality must have a satisfactory program for providing all necessary public improvements within the area assisted by the grant.
4. The municipality has an obligation to assure that any individuals or families who are displaced by the code enforcement activities are offered decent, safe, and sanitary housing within their means, and to provide related relocation assistance.

The area selected for the Concentrated Code Enforcement Program must be built up, predominantly residential in character, and with code violations existing in 20% of the buildings in the area. Conditions in the area must be such that the proposed program for concentrated code enforcement and the provision of the proposed public improvements may be expected to eliminate code violations and arrest the decline of the area.

Demolition Grants

Another new program authorized in 1965 is for Federal grants to cities, other municipalities, and counties to assist in financing the cost of demolishing structures which, under State or local law, have been determined to be structurally sound or unfit for human habitation and which the locality has authority to demolish. Under the legislation, the demolition must be on a planned neighborhood basis and further the overall renewal objectives of the locality. In addition, a program of enforcement of existing local housing and related codes must be currently underway in the locality. Grants may be made for up to two-thirds of the cost of demolition.

In order to be eligible for a grant, the locality must have a currently certified Workable Program of Community Improvement and the structures to be demolished must constitute a public nuisance and a serious hazard to the public health or welfare. In addition, the governing body of the municipality must determine that other available legal procedures to secure remedial action by the owners of the structures involved have been exhausted and that demolition by governmental action is required.

The locality will be obligated to assure that any individuals or families displaced as a result of the federally assisted demolition are offered decent, safe, and sanitary housing. Relocation payments on the same basis as in urban renewal project activities also must be made.

Neighborhood Facilities

The Neighborhood Facilities Grant Program is authorized by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 to assist in financing the development cost of neighborhood facilities for programs of community service. Grants may not exceed two-thirds of the development cost of the facilities, or three-fourths in officially designated redevelopment areas. Although grants may be made only to local public bodies or agencies that have authority under State or local law to undertake a project, a nonprofit organization may be the owner or operator of the neighborhood facility, under the supervision of the public body applicant.

Financing of new housing and the rehabilitation of existing structures must come primarily from private investment. Redevelopment or conservation of slum and blighted areas, as well as other public improvements, often displaces families, many of whom do not have the means to obtain adequate housing in the normal private market. The law requires that there be provided decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings available to people displaced from urban renewal areas, at rents or prices within their means. While some displaced families may be rehoused in low-rent public housing, the bulk of the rehousing resources will be privately owned. Another large area of housing need is accommodations for low and moderate income families generally. The housing assistance programs of HUD and its constituents are designed to meet both these needs in the following manner:

Rehabilitation Loans

The Housing Act of 1964, as amended, authorizes Federal loans to owners or tenants of residential or business property in urban renewal or code enforcement areas to enable them to bring the structures up to local code requirements, or to carry out the objectives of the official urban renewal plan for the area.

Interest rates on rehabilitation loans are limited to 3 percent, and loans may have a term of not more than 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the structure after rehabilitation, whichever is less. These loans will be made only when the borrower is unable to secure the necessary funds from other sources on comparable terms and conditions.

Rehabilitation Grants

Federal grants are available to qualified low-income owner-occupants of housing in an urban renewal or code enforcement area for the repair and improvement of their homes so that the property conforms to applicable codes or other requirements of the urban renewal plan.

The maximum rehabilitation grant is $1,500. Within this limit, the grant may not exceed:

(1) The actual cost of the repairs and improvements, if the applicant's annual income is $3,000 or less, or

(2) If the applicant's annual income exceeds $3,000, an amount not in excess of that portion of the actual cost of repairs and improvements which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized as part of the applicant's monthly housing expense without requiring that expense to exceed 25% of the applicant's monthly income.

LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

Preference for admission to new or existing low-rent public housing is provided by law for individuals and families of low income displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action. The Department of HUD can contract to make development loans and pay annual subsidies for public housing projects, upon application of a local housing authority, and with the approval and cooperation of the local government.

FEDERAL MORTGAGE INSURANCE

Congress has provided more liberal FHA mortgage insurance to assist in the elimination of slums and urban blight; the rehabilitation and conservation of existing properties and neighborhoods, and the provision of new and rehabilitated sales and rental housing, both for families displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action and families of low and moderate income. These provisions are incorporated in two Sections of the National Housing Act, Sections 220 and 221.

Section 220 provides special mortgage insurance assistance in urban renewal areas which have been certified to FHA by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. It may be used to assist in financing the rehabilitation of existing salvable housing, through the refinancing of an existing mortgage, plus the cost of home improvements. It may also be used to assist in financing new sales or rental housing, in single or multi-family structures, in certified areas.

Certain nondwelling facilities, consist with the Urban Renewal Plan, may be included in a Section 220 insured mortgage when the insured project is predominantly residential and the FHA Commissioner finds that nondwelling facilities included in the mortgage contribute to the economic feasibility of the insured project.

Section 220(h) provides specifically for FHA-insured home improvement loans on properties in urban renewal or code enforcement project areas. These loans bear interest at not more than 6 percent. Term of maturity may be up to 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the property, whichever is less. These insured loans are reviewed and processed in FHA Field Insuring Offices on a relatively simplified basis.
Also provided is insurance on loans for public improvements for which a homeowner is legally liable.

Section 221 authorizes FHA to insure mortgages on new or rehabilitated housing for sale or rent to families or elderly and handicapped individuals displaced from urban renewal areas or by other governmental action causing displacement, such as the construction of schools, highways, or other public improvements.
Mortgage insurance is available for new homes, and for the purchase and repair of existing homes, containing from one to four units. Down payments are $200 per dwelling unit for displaced purchasers, which may include legal fees and other items contained in closing costs.

Section 221 also provides liberal terms for the purchase of new or existing houses and the repair of housing by any low or moderate income family.

Under Section 221(d)(3), a below-market, or low-interest rate, rental housing program for displaced families, other low and moderate income families, and elderly or handicapped individuals is provided. The mortgage financing for a new or rehabilitated rental housing project shall bear an interest rate not to exceed 3%. Such mortgages are available in communities having a Workable Program for Community Improvement, certified by the Secretary of HUD and may be obtained by nonprofit corporations, limited dividend corporations, and cooperatives, or other mortgagors whose rents, charges, and operations are regulated by the FHA Commissioner. Public agencies that are not receiving financial assistance for public housing exclusively are also eligible.
Other FHA programs have proven useful in connection with urban renewal. They are Section 213 for the financing of management type cooperative housing, and Section 231, which provides special terms for housing for the elderly or handicapped. Section 203(k), enacted in 1961, provides home improvement loans, in amounts up to $10,000 per dwelling unit, at an interest rate not more than 6 percent, for the improvement of homes outside of urban renewal project areas. These loans may be for terms of up to 20 years or three-fourths of the remaining economic life of the property, whichever is less, and do not require the refinancing of existing mortgages on property.

Rent Supplement Program

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 authorized a rent supplement program which may be utilized as an aid to the relocation of certain site occupants displaced by urban renewal and other public programs.
To be eligible, an occupant must be an individual or family with an income not higher than the maximum amount established in the area for occupancy of low-rent public housing and, in addition, must be in one of the following categories:

1. Displaced by governmental action.
2. 62 years of age or older.

3. Physically handicapped.
4. Occupying substandard housing.
5. Occupying, or formerly occupying, a dwelling situated in an area determined by the Small Business Administration, subsequent to April 1, 1965, to have been affected by a natural disaster, and which has been extensively damaged or destroyed as a result of the disaster.

The amount of rent supplement payment cannot exceed the difference between the fair market rental for the dwelling unit and 25 percent of the occupant's income. Payments will be reviewed periodically and adjusted to reflect changes in income or rent.

Housing owners who are eligible to enter into contracts to receive rent supplement payments will be nonprofit, cooperative, or limited dividend owners who provide housing financed with mortgages insured by FHA under Section 221(d)(3) at market interest rates. Such housing can consist of a project of five or more dwelling units which may be individual dwelling units, row houses, semi-detached housing, or multifamily housing. The housing must be either new housing or housing that is improved by a substantial amount of rehabilitation financed by the insured mortgage.

In addition, rent supplements are available on a restricted and experimental basis for housing financed with mortgages insured by FHA under the Section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate program for low- or moderate-income families and for housing for the elderly financed with a direct Federal loan under Section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 or under the FHA Section 231 mortgage insurance program for rental housing for the elderly. However, not more than 10 percent of the amounts approved in annual appropriation acts for the rent supplement program may be utilized for the experimental program, of which half may be used for housing provided under the FHA below-market program and half for housing under the elderly direct loan program and the FHA elderly program.

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Under its special assistance programs, FNMA is authorized to support FHA Section 220 and certain types of Section 221 housing, including all housing for eligible displaced families, by purchasing and making advance commitments to purchase such mortgages.

OTHER RELATED FEDERAL AIDS

Disaster Areas

Special Federal assistance is available for disaster areas. An area that is in need of redevelopment or rehabilitation as a result of a catastrophe which the President has declared to be a major disaster may be extended urban renewal assistance without regard to certain laws and regulations governing regular urban renewal projects.

Redevelopment Areas

Special Federal assistance in urban renewal is available for areas of substantial and persistent unemployment that have been designated as redevelopment areas by the Secretary of Commerce under the Area Redevelopment Act, or successor legislation.

Educational Institutions and Hospitals

Special benefits are available to an urban renewal project located near the principal buildings or a major branch of an educational institution or hospital. These projects are not subject to certain requirements governing regular urban renewal projects. Furthermore, expenditures by eligible donors for land acquisition, demolition, and relocation may be credited to the required local share of the cost of these projects. This reduces the amount of other local grants-in-aid which the locality would have to provide for its urban renewal program.

Rebuilding the Slums

by James Ridgeway

While faith in the miracle-working power of the Office of Economic Opportunity has faded, there is some hope within Congress and the administration that private industry can be recruited to carry out the war on poverty.

This amounts to more than running Job Corps camps, which several of the big companies are now doing. The White House, for example, is seriously considering a proposal from the Department of Housing and Urban Development to create an Urban Development Corp. It would induce builders to construct low-income housing through various loan guarantee schemes. Both Senators Javits and Percy have advanced ideas for Comsat-type companies that could get new housing into run-down areas and persuade business to put installations in depressed places. Senator Robert Kennedy looks to industry for help in financing a new community corporation he recently set up in the Bedford-Stuyvesant slum of Brooklyn. He hopes this kind of organization will give local residents a chance to shape the development of their community. Walter Reuther is starting much the same kind of project in Detroit. And at the recent round of Senate hearings on the problems of the cities, both Senators Ribicoff and Kennedy spent a good deal of time trying to find out from businessmen what it would take to get them into slum rehabilitation programs.

The creation and manipulation of markets is much in vogue in Washington and is part of what the administration calls "Creative Federalism." Just as the government gets industry to build space ships to go to the moon, now it wants business to turn technology to putting across the programs of the Great Society. There are already some examples of what this can lead to. In the past year or so electronics companies and publishing houses merged to form a new educational enterprise. It is primed with money from HEW, which just now is in the throes of reorganization that will make it into an efficient, domestic version of the Pentagon. General Electric announced last summer it plans to build new cities; other companies are in the business as well and Senator Ribicoff enthusiastically called for a "new cities industry." Creating a market in the slums is an extension of this kind of thinking. But it is a dubious proposition since there is no money to be spent for goods and services in the slum, and whatever activity takes place there will, in large part, have to be induced by the government. The country, however, is at war in Vietnam, and there is little interest in spending more on the poor.

Nonetheless, there are signs that businessmen are at least curious about prospects of the slum business. There are eight million dilapidated city homes and rehabilitating them is a potentially enormous market for builders and building supply companies. A few companies are already engaged: US Gypsum is spending $1.25 million to rebuild a square block in Harlem and intends to start similar projects in other cities. Armstrong Cork Co. is rehabilitating a tenement in North Philadelphia. The American Plywood Association, a manufacturers trade group, is putting up $150,000 to renovate buildings in the Hough area of Cleveland. The companies don't want to become landlords; they expect to turn over these buildings to nonprofit sponsors on completion.

Out of its Harlem project US Gypsum developed a new heating system as well as new kinds of materials for making floors and ceilings. In a recent experiment in rehabilitating a tenement on the lower east side of Manhattan, a crane picked prefabricated kitchen and bathroom units off a truck, and dropped them down through a hole cut in the building's roof. It took an hour to bolt them into place. New kinds of wallboard and vinyl flooring were found practicable, also windows that can be expanded to fit the odd shaped openings in old buildings. Garbage can be dropped down a chute into a machine that first compresses it, then disinfects and perfumes it.

Such experiments suggest that housing costs can be lowered substantially. The Department of Housing and Urban Development wants to employ the new methods in a mass low-income housing program. It has asked the President to set up an Urban Development Corporation (sometimes called a Comsat for Housing which it does not at all resemble) that would build five million new housing units over the next 10 years at a cost of $50 billion. Details are not available, but under one version of this scheme, the President would appoint a board of directors, made up of people from government, business, labor, civil rights and so on. They would oversee the corporation's activities which, in effect, would combine and expand existing housing programs. The scheme would utilize urban renewal agencies, which on the local level would have to condemn the land and work out reforms of restrictive building codes. Then under a vastly expanded low-income housing program, called 221 (d) 3, the government would insure loans from private lenders such as banks, insurance companies, etc., to nonprofit or limited profit groups wanting to build the housing. After a new house was built or an old one rehabilitated, the government would buy the mortgage through the Federal National Mortgage Association.

The average 221 (d) 3 unit for three people now rents for $109 a month. It is meant to attract the working poor and is a cut above public housing where monthly rents range from $35 to $55. However, the government plan envisions reducing building costs over a 10-year period from the current $16,000 to $8,000, which would make the units competitive with public housing.

The idea for an Urban Development Corp. came out of a conference of housing experts held at Woods Hole, Mass., last summer, and in large part represents the thinking of Hortense Gabel – the former commissioner of rent and rehabilitation in New York City – and Thomas O. Paine, the manager of General Electric's center for advanced study.

Senator Javits has a different idea for getting business into the slums. He wants to give a federal charter to a new Economic Opportunity Corp. Three of its 15-member board of directors would be appointed by the President, and the company would raise money by selling $50 million of stock in the public market. This Comsat-like company would be a promoter, selling its technical services and advice to local groups seeking industrial and commercial development. The Economic Opportunity Corp. could come into a slum, lay out a plan for economic development, arrange a pool of financiers to take the risk out of lending; and, in general, attract business by smoothing the way for it, setting up job-training schemes which would provide the labor. It would counsel and might even lend some cash to struggling small business ventures. In return, the Economic Opportunity Corp. would either get money, probably from government planning funds given to local communities, or take a small equity holding in the project. A potential investor might ponder this proposition a long time before buying the stock.

In the Illinois campaign, Charles Percy called for a new private National Home Ownership Foundation which could lend funds at low rates to low-income families who wanted homes. The foundation would get its funds from commercial banks, union pension funds, industrial corporations and federal, state and local governments. The new home owner could help build the house and thereby establish his equity in the proj-

The Manifesto

After the rioting in Chicago a group of youth sitting with Dr. King and with me said the following: "You fellows have produced nothing. Dr. King has been here for a year. There has been no accommodation to him. But when we wanted sprinklers, we went out in the street, forgetting your nonviolence and your patience, and we tore up the street, and in 24 hours we had not only the sprinklers we wanted, but we had in addition to those sprinklers swimming pools. Now, Dr. King, Daley hasn't given you a damn thing, but he has given us what we fought for."

Following the riot in Watts, Dr. King and I went there in the midst of the riot to do what we could. A young man stood up and talked about their manifesto, and quite ignorantly I asked him if I might see a copy of his manifesto, whereupon he took out of his pocket a box of matches and lit one and held it up and said, "That is our manifesto, burn, baby, burn."

When we said to him, "But, young man, what have you gained by this?" he said the following: "We asked the mayor to come and talk with us, and he would not come. We asked the governor to come, and he would not come. We asked the chief of police to come, and he would not come. But after we issued our manifesto, they all came." And then he whispered and said sotto voce, so all the young teenagers could hear it, "And when you and Dr. King go out in the street, you had better be careful because they have sent us so many sociologists, baby, so many economists, so many social workers, if you and King aren't careful, you will trip over them on the street."

I maintain that unless something that is total [is done], which sees the problem of housing, schools, jobs, the psychology of the ghetto, as a single problem, and a master plan for dealing with them simultaneously, forthrightly, then this society has only itself to blame, because it is indirectly teaching the young dispossessed in this nation that if they want something, the only way they can get it is not to depend on leaders who are temperate, leaders who advocate nonviolence, but that they themselves must take the law into their own hands.

This is a tragedy, but I recommend to you to see that it is a tragedy which is being socially taught by the inability of this society forthrightly to come forth with victories for the dispossessed in order that they can maintain their faith in this nation, maintain their faith in law and order, and maintain their faith in the cement of society, which is nonviolent action.

BAYARD RUSTIN

Before The Ribicoff Committee, December 6, 1966.

ect. Percy feels that home ownership is one sensible way of making people into more responsible citizens.

Meanwhile, Senator Robert Kennedy has set into motion his plan for a community corporation to direct the rebuilding of New York City slums. (An early version of Kennedy's idea was described in the October 22 issue of this journal.) Kennedy has announced the establishment of the Bedford-Stuyvesant Renewal and Rehabilitation Corp. It is nonprofit and designed to respond to and represent the desires of the community; it will draft plans for housing, health clinics, recreational facilities, and commercial and industrial development. Its activities may branch out into running supermarkets, even schools. In some respects this sort of community corporation looks rather like a new form of neighborhood government, although the precise details of how the local people are to be involved are left vague. For the time being, it is headed by Civil Court Judge Thomas R. Jones, a Democratic leader.

Changing Slum Institutions

Kennedy has also brought into being a second corporation called the Development & Services Corp. Its board of directors will include luminaries of business and finance: Douglas Dillon, Thomas J. Watson Jr., William Paley and so on. They will provide the community with expert managerial advice, try to convince industry to set up offices in Bedford-Stuyvesant and finance new projects. The company also will act as trustee, receiving and paying out money. Thus, the conservative foundations, as well as the businessmen, may be convinced that their money won't be stolen by sharp operators.

As an initial inducement to pull industry into Bedford-Stuyvesant, Kennedy counts on the community corporation's receiving money from a new program he helped write into the Economic Opportunity Act last year. This amendment provides $20 million for special impact area projects. Under it, Sargent Shriver can contract with private companies as well as public bodies who hire slum residents for work that will lead to improving their neighborhoods. Local people could be trained and then employed to build housing. Sales and managerial personnel could be trained to staff a branch of a big department store; vocational training could be given to meet the specific needs of a light manufacturing company that agrees to come into Bedford-Stuyvesant.

While the Kennedy plan looks like an extension of one of the poverty program's community action projects, in theory, at least, it is meant to be different. The community action programs have never done much more than offer a heavy dose of social services; Kennedy, however, is talking about changing slum institutions; he looks toward building a prosperous community with a viable economy. For example, the way the OEO works, if people complained to the local anti-poverty man that the stores were charging high prices, the local poverty office would ask OEO headquarters for money to hire social scientists to run a study. If the local study results were interesting, then more social scientists would be laid on for a national study. Then, there would be another grant, so that the local anti-poverty group could hire expert home economists who would tell the people to buy more wisely and eat more sensible sorts of foods. The Kennedy plan, however, begins by assuming that the community might be better off if it ran its own cooperative grocery store.

Much of the thinking behind the community corporation comes out of the ECCO project in Columbus, Ohio (NR, February 5, 1966) – an effort to build a democratic neighborhood government employing local people in slum reconstruction. Walter Reuther is initiating a project similar to Kennedy's, in Detroit. In Chicago the militant Woodlawn Organization and the Maremont Foundation are jointly bidding on an urban renewal project. They will hire local people to build low-income housing.

Of these different approaches to getting industry into the slum business, HUD's low-income housing scheme has perhaps the best chance of being taken up by the federal government. For while it sounds daring and innovative, it is in fact a rather innocuous but sensible extension and rearrangement of existing programs. There is even the possibility that it could be put into operation without legislation. It need not involve moving Negroes into white residential areas. The money would be channeled through the mayor's office so that people like Mr. Daley could control neighborhood groups. Unlike the Kennedy-type plan, the HUD proposal does not require that local residents be hired to do the construction, a suggestion that would bring trouble from the building trades unions. The unions, however, may have some reservations about this scheme, the success of which requires construction innovations that will reduce labor costs. The plan's backers, however, argue that the building business will be so greatly expanded that employment levels will not suffer, and work may even increase. All in all, a plan for an Urban Development Corp. seems a good program for the President to throw back at Senators Kennedy and Ribicoff who have been chiding him for not doing enough for cities.

But the HUD plan got in a political mess after it was described in The New York Times, a day before the Ribicoff hearings opened. In the eyes of some paranoiac administration officials this disclosure stole the President's thunder. Actually the HUD plan has been discussed in one version or another in newspapers since the Woods Hole conference last summer. At any rate, the Times' story sent officials at HUD into hysterics and they called up the reporter who wrote it and bawled him out. Copies of the proposals had been sent around to government offices for comments, and these now were called back to the White House. Minor officials throughout the government quaked lest the sleuths from the White House and HUD accuse them of leaking the story to the Times. Mrs. Gabel, who had been scheduled to appear before the Ribicoff committee backed out rather than discuss the secret plan in public. For weeks this childish business went on. At this writing, the plan is said still to be taken seriously at the White House, but details are a secret.

I think Kennedy's New York plan is the most interesting and over the long run holds out the best hope for real change of any of these proposals. Of course, it remains to be seen whether a representative community organization runs the show or whether it is dominated by the businessmen advisers or local Democratic hacks. And it is difficult to envision this kind of program going very far without federal loan guarantees that could help attract private investment.

However, Kennedy is moving in the right direction by seeking to employ people in planning and building their own communities. His program allows for and encourages local diversity; it is meant to place control with the people through a community organization that in effect is a new sort of local government. The Kennedy scheme deemphasizes OEO's social service approach, and assumes from the beginning that slum institutions must be changed. In particular, it looks toward building an economy.

The lack of interesting and diverse kinds of work is the crucial problem in America for everyone, not simply the poor. Work, not just income, is what determines one's sense of self-importance in the country. The Kennedy plan aims to put people to work. It is ironic that the Office of Economic Opportunity has made exciting work for young, middle-class college graduates who have been hired to find out about their country by living in the slums. And the poverty program has made interesting work for political scientists whose business it is to study the poor. But it hasn't made much work for the poor and it hasn't noticeably changed the ghetto. Giving people decent inexpensive housing and allowing them a larger dole will be some help. But these measures aren't likely to change the shape of the ghetto either, and in fact, they can turn out to be more sophisticated means for manipulating and preserving a dependent subculture.

Very probably the only way we can hope to change the ghetto of the Northern city is to encourage the people living there to decide what they want to make of the place, and then put them to work doing the job. Kennedy's scheme works toward this end.

Reexamining the Warren Report

by Alexander M. Bickel

There is a story (reported in Newsweek magazine), that Chief Justice Earl Warren recently remarked in private: "I was a district attorney in California for 12 years, and I tried a number of murder cases. If I were still a district attorney and the Oswald case came into my jurisdiction, given the same evidence I could have gotten a conviction in two days and never heard about the case again." Whether or not uttered by the Chief Justice, the remark bespeaks one widely shared attitude toward the Warren Commission and its report on the assassination. The commission, in this view, performed the function of a jury in a criminal case. Its verdict rests on sufficient evidence, although, of course, there can be no mathematical demonstration that it is a true verdict. Such a verdict should, and does generally in our system, remain undisturbed, unless some bit of evidence is uncovered that would make a decisive difference in the result, and that is new in the sense of not having been available to the jury. In this sense, none of the recent critics of the Warren Commission has come up with any new evidence. That should, therefore, be that.

And yet that has not been that. On the contrary, serious and responsible proposals for a renewed investigation – a new trial, if you will – have recently come from many quarters. The idea was first broached last summer by Richard N. Goodwin, the former presidential assistant, in a review of Edward Jay Epstein's book, Inquest. Mr. Goodwin suggested merely that an independent group should determine whether a new investigation is necessary. Others have since gone farther, among them Life magazine, Walter Lippmann,

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

1300 COMMERCE BUILDING / P. O. BOX 1740 / ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30301

January 20, 1967

Dear Member:

The Urban Renewal Committee of your Atlanta Chamber of Commerce takes pleasure in submitting to the Chamber membership its second quarterly status report on the Urban Renewal Program in Atlanta.

With the status chart is a special report on "Urban Renewal Progress in 1966," which the Committee felt would add perspective and meaning to the statistical information. In reviewing the progress report, you will note that four additional areas of our city already are under consideration as future Urban Renewal sites, and an application is under study to qualify Atlanta for a "Model City" federal grant.

Bear in mind that the information in this report was obtained from the Atlanta Housing Authority, which is responsible for administering land acquisition and disposition; relocation of families, individuals and businesses, and other processes of the Urban Renewal program. The report does not cite the substantial programs of code enforcement, physical rehabilitation and attention to human problems under the direction of the City of Atlanta, Economic Opportunity Atlanta and volunteer agencies.

Publication of the status reports was begun by the Committee in September of 1966 as one means of encouraging a greater knowledge, involvement and concern on the part of the business community in regard to this federally assisted program. Our efforts will be worthwhile if these reports have helped increase your awareness and understanding of a program which is so much a part of our city's present and its future.

You may recall that our September 1966 report proposed distribution initially to the entire membership and thereafter only to those members who expressed a desire to receive the information regularly. If you would like to receive future Urban Renewal information and reports, please fill out the enclosed postal card and mail it soon. Your name will be placed on a special mailing list at once.

Sincerely,

John C. Wilson

URBAN RENEWAL PROGRESS
IN 1966

(The following summary of Atlanta's progress and accomplishments in Urban Renewal during 1966 was condensed from the remarks of Howard Openshaw, Chief Planner of the Atlanta Housing Authority, to the Citizens Advisory Committee on Urban Renewal, December 14, 1966.)

Atlanta's Urban Renewal Program got under way in July, 1959, when three projects -- Butler Street, Rawson-Washington and Thomasville -- went into execution. Today, seven and a half years later, Atlanta has an impressive Urban Renewal Program, second only to Philadelphia's in size. It encompasses 2,500 acres of land and includes one project completed, eight projects in execution, and three in planning.

One has only to ride through the downtown section to see rising out of former slums a magnificent $14 million stadium, a $9 million auditorium, high-rise apartments, office buildings, and motels. Even more impressive, though less visible, is the fact that where once stood rubble, neglect and decay, there has come to the people a new hope.

BUT NO LOW RENTAL HOUSING!

Perhaps the best way to recap the progress made in Urban Renewal is by project:

-- In the Butler Street project, construction was started on improvements totaling $7.5 million, including the 12-story office buildings for Cousins Properties and Citizens Trust, and facilities for U.S. Rubber, Ford Motor Company and Avis Rent-A-Car. The eight-story, 210-unit, Antoine Graves Public Housing for the elderly was dedicated in May. November marked its first year of occupancy, with 100 per cent of the units occupied and a waiting list.

-- In the Rawson-Washington project, construction was started on 650 units of Public Housing in the McDaniel Street area. A 10-story high-rise containing 154 units for the elderly is included. Estimated cost is $9.2 million.

Under a letter of consent and using local funds, the Authority is providing relocation assistance to residents being relocated from the site for the proposed elementary school to serve the Public Housing residents. A parcel on Capitol Avenue directly across from the Juvenile Court Building has been put under contract for sale. A 456-unit motor hotel is proposed in one 10-story and two four-story buildings. Improvements are estimated to cost $6.2 million.

-- In the University Center project, improvements completed include 122 University Plaza luxury apartments costing $1 million. These units are fully occupied and have a waiting list. Construction is almost complete on the $150,000 addition to the Atlanta Baking Company property, and an $85,000 commercial facility on Fair Street.

-- One of the most significant achievements of the year was the offering of all land in the Rockdale project available for private development. The offering includes 160 acres of land consisting of six tracts for residential development to accomodate 1,500 dwelling units under Section 221 (d) 3 and one commercial tract. A fixed price of $896,000 is set on the land. Date for submission of proposals is March 15, 1967. Brochures are available to anyone who is interested.

-- In the Thomasville project, an amendment has been submitted to the federal government to permit Public Housing on a tract north of McDonough Road. Three hundred fifty units of Public Housing are now on the drawing boards. The city has purchased and is proceeding to develop the park site at a cost of $54,000. Sixty-three single-family lots are currently on the market.

The Thomasville project is fast becoming a model community as a result of the quality of the homes constructed, the sidewalks, the adequate provision for parks, schools and shopping facilities, and attention to the expansion needs of the churches within the area.

-- In the Georgia State project, the federal government has approved the Part I amendment to include the block north of the police station on Decatur Street. Georgia State is now completing its comprehensive campus development plan.

-- The Housing Authority completed the Howard High School project in February of 1966, the first of Atlanta's Urban Renewal projects to be completed.

-- In the Georgia Tech project, two amendments were submitted to the federal government resulting from land purchases by the Board of Regents reducing the local share. A Survey and Planning Application was submitted on Georgia Tech Project No. 2. When completed, an additional 67 acres of land will be added to the Georgia Tech campus.

-- The West End project went into execution in September. Already 42 parcels of land have been acquired, with demolition and relocation activities under way. Five rehabilitation grants have been approved. The West End project office, which served as an information center during the planning stage, has been highly successful in involving the people in the renewal program. The 250-unit John O. Chiles Public Housing high rise for the elderly was dedicated in May. The project enjoys 100 per cent occupancy with a waiting list of 200.

-- In the Buttermilk Bottoms-North Avenue project, the final project report was submitted to the federal government in June. Under letters of consent, using local funds, the Authority is purchasing land for auditorium parking and street widening.

-- The Bedford-Pine project is in the planning stage, with appraisals under way and project rehabilitation standards being prepared in collaboration with FHA. A project office has been opened. Under an Early Land Application loan, the Authority is proceeding to acquire land for expansion of the C. W. Hill School and park site.

In addition to the progress cited above, the Housing Authority has acquired 306 parcels of land costing $3.5 million, relocated 509 families from Urban Renewal areas and provided housing assistance to 364 families relocated as a result of other governmental action. The authority demolished 172 structures, sold 98 parcels of land for $2.2 million. Some 357 dwelling units were built on Urban Renewal land. Improvements totalling $9.3 million were completed on land sold by the Authority during the year. Construction was started on another $19.5 million worth of improvements.

What's ahead for 1967?

The Housing Authority and the City Planning Department have prepared Survey and Planning Applications on four additional areas: East Atlanta, Vine City, Cooper Glenn, and Plunkettown. In addition, the city intends to apply for a grant to plan a comprehensive "Model City" program. Urban renewal would be involved in the total attack on the social and physical blight contained in the "Model City" area.

As we look to the future, I would lift up four major areas of concern:

1. Physical renewal is not enough. Moving illiterate, unemployed families out of slums into new housing units does not turn them into responsible citizens. We need an all out, massive, coordinated attack on the causes of poverty -- be they education, housing, employment or social services.

2. While much progress has been made in our attack on the physical blight of our city, the number of substandard dwellings continues to increase. With the completion of the Community Improvement Program in early 1967, we need to undertake a variety of programs, including Urban Renewal and Housing Code enforcement, on a priority basis.

3. Adequate housing resources at rents relocated families can afford remains a challenge. In New York City the problem is so acute there is even a shortage of substandard housing. How can we meet the problem? By staging acquisition in Urban Renewal areas... by making residential redevelopment the first order of business...by encouraging private enterprise to provide housing for moderate income families...by providing adequate housing for low income families.

Atlanta has 8,874 Public Housing units, with only four vacancies; 650 Public Housing units are under construction, 490 units are in planning. Atlanta has a reservation for 1,500 additional units, including 300 for leased housing.

4. And lastly, there must be an open dialogue between the city and its people. Encouraging citizen participation and better communication will go far in removing any feeling in slum areas that the city is indifferent to the plight of its people.

PEARL - PASCAGOULA EXTENSION

Housing

URBAN RENEWAL

IS NOT THE ANSWER

The Pearl-Pascagoula Extension must be built. This project has been comprehensively planned for years and is an indispensable part of the eighty million dollar ($80,000,000) road system in and around Jackson.

There are only two ways to finance this complete project:

1) By paying for the work out of operating funds, which would necessitate a rather large increase in taxes. The entire appropriation under this plan would, by law, have to be made on or before the contract is let, which would automatically throw it into one fiscal year period; or

2) An authorization by the people in the election March 7, to issue bonds in the amount of $3,000,000, all of which will be used for this project. These bonds will be sold only as needed to finance construction. Bonds would be payable over a 25-year period and, under present plans and conditions, there would be no need to raise taxes to take care of the annual payments. This is the financing plan we recommend to the people of Jackson.

URBAN RENEWAL

There are several reasons why an Urban Renewal program would not be practical to finance the comprehensively planned Pearl-Pascagoula Extension.

1) In the first place, Urban Renewal is a slum clearance program, and the Pearl-Pascagoula Extension could be financed by this method only as a part of an overall downtown Urban Renewal project, costing many millions of dollars, of which the City must provide its 1/3 share.

2) If Urban Renewal ever became available, a plan of the

a) Homeowners who have improved and maintained their homes would have to pay in the form of taxes 1/3 of the cost of developing other private property which owners have neglected. Public money should not be used to develop private property.

In the Memphis Commercial Appeal of Tuesday, February 14, 1967, are the following statements under the heading "Next City Administration To Inherit Tax Structure Carrying Maximum Burden"; ..... "more local money will be needed to continue Urban Renewal projects here. Cost of the Beale Street Urban Renewal project has been estimated at $20,000,000. The City's share of the cost will be one-third. The Medical Center and Court Avenue Urban Renewal projects have not yet been completed."

b) If Urban Renewal is adopted, it will change Jackson's housing code, zoning laws, subdivision regulations, and building codes. All codes must be submitted to the Federal Government for approval and must be certified every year.

c) During the Urban Renewal public hearing and election, the City of Jackson would be embroiled in strife and controversy. In BUSINESS WEEK of February 18, 1967, on page 183, is an article entitled "Potholes in the Road to Renewal". This article is a brief discussion of a squabble over Urban Renewal now raging in Cleveland, Ohio. The following are some excerpts from this article: .....

... "Federal money looms large in Cleveland's present civic strife. Last month, Secretary Robert C. Weaver of the Housing and Urban Development Department shut off all Urban Renewal Funds program, and the Pearl-Pascagoula Extension could be financed by this method only as a part of an overall downtown Urban Renewal project, costing many millions of dollars, of which the City must provide its 1/3 share.

2) If Urban Renewal ever became available, a plan of the whole downtown area, or whatever part of the City of Jackson would be included in an Urban Renewal program, would have to be prepared for approval by the Federal Government. This would take a minimum of 18 months. Then a public hearing would have to be held and if approved by the City Council, the plan would have to be voted on by the people in a special election held for that purpose — all of this would take a minimum of 2 1/2 years. The Pearl-Pascagoula Extension must not be delayed this long.

   If the Federal Government ever authorized Urban Renewal money for this project, it would be applied to the payment of bonds approved by this election.

3) Some of the matters which would be considered in the public hearing and election on Urban Renewal would be:

newal now raging in Cleveland, Ohio. The following are some excerpts from this article: .....

...“Federal money looms large in Cleveland's present civic strife. Last month, Secretary Robert C. Weaver of the Housing and Urban Development Department shut off all Urban Renewal Funds, which totalled $34,000,000 to the city. His reason was what he called ‘inadequacies of leadership’..... Eight months ago, Weaver told Mayor Locher he wasn't happy with Cleveland's slow progress on Urban Renewal.... Weaver expresses personal regret but argues that ‘Washington cannot escape its responsibilities on local programs’ ”.

The people of Jackson want this comprehensively planned project completed — they want it adequately financed now — and the only way to assure immediate completion is by approval of the $3,000,000 bond election on March 7.

Planning for Cities in Chaos

By ADA LOUISE HUXTABLE

It is easy to say that the profession of planning is at a crossroads, or in crisis; both are comfortable clichés. In less comfortable terms, crisis is the point at which a planner sent by the city to aid a community is told by its representatives that if nothing happens they will simply burn down their buildings. And they mean it.

Crisis is Watts, Detroit and Newark. It is a country with a galloping rate of substandard housing and the job of rebuilding itself by the end of the century. It is cities in chaos. It is New York, where chaos has been impacted by a thirty-year city failure to work directly with people and their needs.

To put it bluntly, the traditional practice of planning has failed. The planning profession is currently going through agonizing reappraisal of its aims and practices. Limited in the past, by training and methodology, to purely physical solutions—land use, density calculations and tidy scale models of Utopia—its practitioners have had remarkably little bearing or impact on the enormous, untidy, tragic human problems of an explosive and changing society. Now they find themselves pushed to the front of the battle against poverty, injustice, decay, ugliness, all the ills of environment and man.

Planners have no sure answers for any of this. But there will be no answers without planning. Now they have a vastly broadened outlook and the benefit of some bitter experience. They also have two important new key concepts: "interdisciplinary" and "advocacy" planning.

Interdisciplinary planning merely means that theory and practice from many fields must be brought to bear on any plan if it is to be a valid answer to people's needs. Advocacy planning is a much more controversial subject. Advanced by the younger members of the profession, it proposes that the planner act as advocate or representative for the people of the neighborhood under study, working with their ideas of what they want, with close understanding of particular ethnic features, community patterns and local conditions. He prepares the community's own plan, as opposed to a plan imposed authoritatively from above. He not only prepares it; he advocates it.

What this amounts to, in most cities, is in-ghetto planning—planning that rejects official city planning procedures. With a tremendous potential for sensitive, local problem-solving on a professional basis—and an equally great potential for trouble—it is bound straight for the spotlight of the urban crisis.

Advocacy Planning Groups

New York already has advocacy planning in ARCH, the Architects' Renewal Council in Harlem. The objective of this small, independent, experimental group has been on-the-spot social design, directly responsive to the community. Recently, in the troubled spirit of the times, most of its dedicated, all-white architect members have stepped aside for Negro replacements so that the movement could be black.

A group called Urban Planning Aid has been set up on the same model for Boston. Newark is about to get a Negro-led advocacy planning unit for its controversial medical center area. University, government and private funds are going to the growing movement. The American Institute of Planners has an offshoot advocacy planning group, and the American Institute of Architects is holding serious discussions on the subject.

Advocacy planning is a pendulum swing from the old-style City Hall planner, who took one field trip to the "blighted" area and then worked from statistics and abstract principles and held public hearings when large sums were already invested in the plan. The advocate planner moves into the community. He helps clarify neighborhood needs and ideas and puts them into professional form; he offers plans instead of protests. Advocacy planning and local pressures, in New York and elsewhere, are succeeding in opening the ear and eye of government to the community.

What can happen, however, is that this planning approach, so full of hope, may itself be susceptible to the ills of the ghetto. It runs a real danger of confusion and perversion by the proponents of black power. This does not mean that it cannot work. But there is a growing question of whether the objectives and methods of advocacy planning will be subverted into just another home-rule device of black nationalism, or if the movement will be permitted to carry out its essential aims.

There is also the matter of whether the client—the community—can apply the expertise of the objective professional to its problems. As in parts of the poverty program, it could become a disastrous amateur take-over.

Shortage of Negro Talent

With the rejection of white architects and planners, the problem also arises of how the huge vacuum of professional talent needed for planning in the nation's ghettos can be filled. The Negro planner is in very short supply. Even the number of white planners fails to meet demand. It is a particular, tragic distortion of our times to feel that only the Negro can do the job.

There are other disquieting questions. Will advocacy planning turn into do-it-yourself without a dialogue between community and city? Will it be real democracy at work, or will it signal a breakdown of the democratic process by ignoring local government and collaborative planning at City Hall? If it breaks with the city, how will it substitute for the city's funds and resources?

The rational answer is cooperation through the city's established structure, but the ghettos are in no mood for rational answers. One of the most promising and provocative new weapons in the fight for our cities and society hangs in the balance.

SCHOOL STRIKE: Official Union Position

The Board of Education has failed the citizens of New York. In its contract talks with the United Federation of Teachers (UFT), it has also failed the teachers and the children. Before the opening of school, UFT received an offer from the Board of Education which dealt almost completely with salaries and fringe benefits. Teachers could not accept such an offer, for in accepting such a proposal, they would have given up their right to bargain on school improvements that are so badly needed in our decaying school system.

Teachers know the many problems that our school system faces. They have been frustrated many times by the Board of Education's bureaucracy on vital improvements that would make our schools better.

To teachers, September 11th was an important day. It was the day that teachers stayed out of school after receiving the highest salary offer that they had ever received in one contract. It was a day that should also have held great significance to the citizens of New York. Teachers, on that day, proved that they were willing to lose $40 to $50 a day to fight for an improved school system and for conditions under which they could do a better job. For 14 days, teachers battled the Board of Education bureaucracy.

Teachers won a victory, but only a partial one. Frankly, they were unable to solve all of the problems of the school system in one contract. They did, however, achieve certain key improvements. Maximum class size in the high schools was reduced from 36 to 34. Maximum class size in junior high schools in economically deprived areas was reduced from 33 to 30, and maximum class size in elementary schools was lowered from 33 to 32. Teachers and parents remember when 45 students in a high school class was not unusual. Now the limit is 34. This overall improvement is a direct result of the UFT's commitment to better education.

The UFT has fought continually FOR parent involvement in the schools. The UFT seeks cooperation with parent and community groups. Unfortunately, some groups in various communities do not realize that the real roadblock to improving the education of children is not the teacher, but the Board of Education. In the new contract, teachers fought for, and won, parent participation in the disruptive child procedures, over the violent objections of the Board of Education. Teachers have fought for, and won, parent participation in new program experimentation on such projects as the More Effective Schools plan. Never before in the history of this country has any teachers' organization fought, and won a battle for, parent, as well as teacher, participation in the schools.

Everyone is familiar with the fact that large numbers of substitutes work in underprivileged area schools. Everyone recognizes that there are too many substitutes

SCHOOL STRIKE: Black Teachers' Group Opposes Union

The African-American Teachers Association opposed the strike called by the United Federation of Teachers (U.F.T.) as we have opposed other policies and positions of the U.F.T. in the past.

Our opposition came as a direct result of the Union's not being responsive to the needs and wants of the Black and Puerto Rican communities. We felt that the "disruptive pupil proposal," which would give teachers the power to suspend students, was racist, divisive, and not in accordance with enlightened teaching. The United Federation of Teachers did not address itself to the causes but rather to the symptoms of the problem. There was no proposal to "get rid of" the disruptive, incompetent, bigoted teachers who are committing mental genocide on hundreds of thousands of Black and Puerto Rican children. Rather, these bigoted teachers were going to be given "potice powers" to suspend our children. Albert Shanker, President of the Union, was and is playing a dangerous game.

In the New York Times Magazine dated Setpember 3, 1967, there is an article entitled, "He Leads His Teachers Up the Down Staircase." A. S. Raskin quotes Mr. Shanker on his method of teaching Black children at J-88-M. "Mr. Shanker would pose his examples to his class in such homely terms as these: If it takes 4 ounces of poison to kill a person, how many ounces would it take to kill your mother, your father, your sister, and your brother? 'It was the only way I could get them to learn; they (Black children) loved it,' stated Mr. Shanker."

I could not believe it. I asked Mr. Shanker had he been quoted correctly, and he told me that essentially the quote was correct and went on to give me additional examples of his racist method of teaching. I had to excuse myself. I was becoming physically ill. The important thing to remember is that Mr. Shanker represents the most liberal, enlightened segment of the United Federation of Teachers. He occupies a high position in the Liberal Party. He is a liberal, enlightened teacher. Save your children.

In 1963, prior to the first school boycott for quality-integrated education, I went before the Administrative Committee of the Union and requested that the Union sanction the principle of the school boycott. I was sharply criticized by those distinguished white gentlemen of labor, and Mr. Shanker made the motion to table the issue--thereby killing any action on the school boycott. You can imagine how amazed I was to hear that darling of labor, Mr. Bayard Rustin, imply that the Union supported the concept of quality-integrated education for Black children!

The Union has also opposed the rotation of experienced teachers into the Black and Puerto Rican communities.

At I.S. 201, the parents had essentially won the right to name their principal. The U.F.T. defeated them; yet, the Union supported the white parents of District Three who wanted and won the right to name their district superintendent. Mr. Shanker's position seems to be--Power is for white folks only.

The U.F.T. is constantly asking for a decrease in class sizes, increases in the number of preparation periods, and a decrease in the number of teaching periods--all noble goals. However, when we create hundreds of new positions in all of the schools within this city, the "white" schools will recruit most of the best teachers --BLACK and white--for their schools, creating a further schortage of teachers in our schools, robbing our schools of our small number of experienced

SCHOOL STRIKE: A Parent's View

More and more, we people of Harlem are showing others that we are a let-us-do-it-ourselves community.

To be able to do things for oneself, one's family, one's neighbor, one's community is to find and have power. If it be a black community, then it be black power. The power of blackness is in its unity. When others speak about the Black and Puerto Rican community, they say why don't they help themselves We can help ourselves to what is rightfully ours.

We the parents in the community are trying to help ourselves by fighting for change in a white power-structured Board of Non-Education for Black and Puerto Rican youth. The I.S. 201 school complex has five Harlem schools, P.S. 68, P.S. 34, P.S. 124, P.S. 133 and I.S. 201, all working together to get what is rightfully ours - an education for our children, something we as Black folks and Puerto Ricans have not really been getting. Not when 89% of our children are below reading level and 75% of our high school youth are dropouts.

This spiral of non - education must be stopped. We of the I.S. 201 Planning Board ask all of the parents to come and get in on what is going on concerning our experimental program.

Stop in at 2 West 125th Street, the Planning Board Office, for information on what you can do to help. Or call us at 427-0516.

The I.S. 201 project is aimed at advancing community expression and confidence and at assuring accountability of our schools for their performance.

In response to the realities, we parents are in effect saying to all the powers that be that we must have a decisive vote in determining what happens in our schools. Direct community participation in the operation of the public schools is our right as Black and Puerto Rican people in this land, America. It is the Black and Puerto Rican community that is saying, "We will do it ourselves - now let us take on the responsibility, but with responsibility must come the powers." No game-playing, be for real, we say to the Board of Education and the United Federation of Teachers, for the Black and Puerto Rican community must - and will - see that our children get an education that will take them all the way in a white society that is refusing to see Black - especially poor Blacks and Puerto Ricans. The burden of responsibility is with us, the parents of the Black and Puerto Rican children.

Remember 89% are below reading level, 75% are high-school dropouts. Ask yourself why? Out of 830 principals, 4 are Black and none Puerto Rican; out of 1,000 assistant principals, 30 are Black or Puerto Rican. Why? Why? Why? Is it because we don't have qualified people? I can't believe we don't have. Then is it a question of white unity? If so, then why not some Black and Puerto Rican unity so we can really make changes.

All I can say to the Black and Puerto Rican community is, "let's go go, baby."

From the Publisher

The Senate has finally appropriated some money for Rent Supplements and Model Cities. The House is reconsidering Rat Extermination. Are these signs that a "cool fall" is going to follow the "long hot summer?"

We wonder.

Lately, we've heard of a number of proposals aimed at getting Big Business involved in the potentially big business of rebuilding slums.

Rebuilding by whom and for whom?

* Rent Supplements are desperately needed in Harlem if people are to afford new and rehabilitated housing. However, the Senate has included with its appropriation a provision which may require non-profit housing sponsors to put up 5% of the cost of a project in cash. This requirement would prevent many community-based groups from using the rent supplement program and help keep control of ghetto housing where it has always been — outside.

* Will proposed incentives to business to invest in slums benefit indigenous businessmen and residents? Or will they just offer a few physical improvements and some token jobs in exchange for subsidized profits and continued colonialism?

It seems to us that the key issue in housing, in the economic development of our communities, in planning our neighborhoods and in educating our children is not simply what decisions are made but who makes them. It is not simply what programs are adopted but who carries them out.

Harlem must evaluate all proposals by government agencies -- for Model Cities, for Urban Renewal, for schools, for social services, for recreation — in terms of the opportunities they provide, or fail to provide, for local control.

This issue of Harlem News has a story on a group (the Community Association of the East Harlem Triangle) that took on the City and won control over the Urban Renewal project in its neighborhood and of another, the I.S. 201 Coordinating Committee, that has shown the way to local control of the schools. There are some failures, too. The story of Milbank-Frawley Circle is a story of a lost opportunity (well, lost unless project area residents move quickly anyway) to run a major housing program the way the community would like, instead of the way the City wants.

Perhaps the lesson to be learned is that until Harlem stands together, the City — or some other outside force -- will always make the policy decisions. And as long as the City always has the initiative and Harlem must always respond after the real decisions are made, there will be no real change.

It is time for Harlem to make its own master plans for housing, schools and services — and let the City know when and where work must start.

ARCH is three years old this month.

It was founded in October of 1964 to provide free technical services to Harlem groups working on community renewal projects. Since that time, ARCH has been involved in a number of different programs:

-- helping community groups to sponsor government-financed rehabilitation or new construction.

-- developing an alternate urban renewal plan with the West Harlem Community Organization.

-- advising other neighborhood renewal councils.

-- organizing volunteer architects and lawyers for Article 7A rent strike cases.

-- providing information on government policies and plans which affect the Harlem community.

-- publishing handbooks on tenant-landlord law, welfare regulations, various government programs, and rehabilitation.

-- developing a neighborhood planning/action curriculum for eighth grade social studies students.

Much has happened in three years. Harlem is now, more than ever, a community bent on self-determination -- strong in its demand for control of policy and programs. ARCH's services can support this demand by supplying information and professional assistance to community development projects. We are ready and anxious to help.

The Long Hot Summer

by Leonard Clay

The white man's long hot summer is over. As far as White America is concerned, it always ends about the first of September. Right after the Labor Day weekend if you will. The Black man's long hot summer is not over. How could it be? Our long hot summer is over when our oppression is over.

In many ways, the Black man is most unique. We are the only group of people I have ever heard of that tried to have a nonviolent revolution. We are also the only group of people I have ever heard of who are supposed to be having a revolution which begins some time in June and ends right after Labor Day. Can you imagine George Washington and them Founding Fathers having a nonviolent three-month revolution? Neither can I.

But the brother is learning. We have begun to meet some violence with some more violence. White violence means Black violence. White nonviolence means Black nonviolence. In other words we have now decided it is necessary to protect both ourselves and our community.

But the Black man is still unique in that he insists upon making White America uncomfortable only in the summer. I can't really understand why white people should be uncomfortable only in the summer if I, a Black man, am to be uncomfortable year round.

Who the hell ever heard of a part time revolution? A summer revolution? How can we win our liberation by working three months out of the year, when Whitey makes a year-round project out of trying to keep us shuffling? Get it together. A part time summer skirmish is not the thing which is going to liberate the Black masses.

I don't really care just what the brothers and sisters do in order to get this revolution together. I agree with Malcolm X when he says, "By any means necessary." But please, brothers: If you are going to do a thing, would you please do it year round?

A Black World

by Sandra Carson

This world is not a black world and therefore it is a world full of secret griefs and sufferings for the blacks in it, especially for the black children. Ask them sometime what they want to be or what they want from life. I did the other day. I asked a little six year-old girl what she wanted most in the world. She told me she wanted her mother to stay home with her and her father to get off the welfare so he would get a decent job and they wouldn't be all the time fighting and drinking and yelling at her and her sisters. She didn't ask to be a nurse or a psychiatrist or a doctor or atomic scientist like the white kids might have, or for wealth. She only wanted the basics. The basics the world never gave to the blacks. Basics we always lacked because at first we were slaves with no freedoms. and now we are second class citizens with freedoms but no assurance we can really use them, so we are even more so slaves of society and its whims. And the children growing up in this era can feel this, and they are sad because other kids can look up to their parents while they see their parents bowing and serving the white man. Their shame is two-fold because they know the world is seeing this at the same time as they are. Many of them are wishing this were a black world. Many of them will try to change this into a black world, a total black world so that their children will not suffer the same shame.

So white man, listen, take heed, don't trample the black children. They are the black future and a violent one at that.

To the Editor

The August issue of Harlem News carried an article on the West 114th Street rehabilitation project. I would like to respond to several of the points raised.

First and most importantly: no tenant in the 114th Street project is paying $125 a month in rent. The highest rent for an apartment in the project will be $112 monthly for a five-bedroom unit, including gas. More usual is a range of $86 to $96 monthly for a two-bedroom unit.

Secondly, I consider the report of a woman's son falling into the next apartment ridiculous. The walls in the units on 114th Street are made of gypsum board and while, with effort, a strong man might be able to smash his fist through them, I seriously question the truth of the story reported.

Thirdly, I know of no family in the project being moved more than twice during the rehabilitation process. This was done in order to speed up the project for everyone on the block. If we had not allowed more than one move per household, the entire rehabilitation process would have been delayed.

So far as complaints about room size go, I am certainly willing to admit that the finished apartments are not ideal in every respect. Rehabilitation does not permit the same freedom as new construction: one is forced to work with an existing structure which has built-in limitations, and, of course, there are restrictions on cost. However, we hope that the rehabilitated apartments are improvements over what existed before.

I am also quite willing to agree that the three-year rent subsidy presents some problems. However, although the tenants eligible for the subsidy are already paying less than full rent, the official three-year period for the subsidy does not begin until the entire project is completed. Therefore, tenants will benefit from the subsidy for a period longer than three years. Hopefully, at the end of that time, other funds can be found to continue the rent supplement.

in our school system. Under the new UFT contract, this category will be abolished. There will be no more substitute teacher licenses, and if the Board of Education does not live up to this, there is a severe financial penalty imposed by the contract. Within two years, your child will be taught only by regular teachers.

In the past, there were no provisions for on-the-job training for new teachers, but in the new UFT contract, new teachers will observe more experienced teachers, and will receive on-the-job training.

The UFT has fought for the teaching of Negro and Puerto Rican history and literature, and although there is no specific mandate in the contract for this, the UFT intends to pursue this matter in its monthly consultations with the Board of Education. We are confident that in the elementary schools we will win such a program shortly.

These are some of the breakthroughs that we have achieved that affect the community most strongly. While we feel these are important advances, we do not believe that this is the end of the struggle for a better school system. We are convinced that unity between teachers and parents can do much more to improve the educational process. The UFT earnestly seeks such cooperation. The Board of Education cannot resist the combined power of teachers and parents. Teachers and parents must work together for better schools!

teachers, and re-staffing our schools with graduates of the "Instant" teacher programs.

We have thousands of Black males, educated as teachers in the South, who have been told their education was inferior, that they are inferior; they seek refuge in the Children's Care Centers of this and other cities, working for the Department of Social Services, etc. This is an absolute waste of Black talent--beautiful Black men underemployed because the system wants it so.

I will soon present a proposal to recruit these Black men for the elementary schools of the Black and Puerto Rican communities. We, the African-American Teachers Association, will issue a call for all Black teachers to seek transfers into the Black communities to become responsible for the education of Black children.

We must insist that the control of the schools be in the hands of the local community. Our children are now being programmed for failure. We can program our children for success, but most essential is this--THAT WE BECOME THE PROGRAMMERS. We cannot abdicate that responsibility to the Board of Education or the United Federation of Teachers. We must save our children!

Harlem Piers Area, now grim and underdeveloped, could be revitalized with jobs and low-rent housing for Harlem residents.

Columbia Plans Grab of Harlem Piers Area

Columbia University, which has been buying up land on Morningside Heights for years, is now proposing to invest $175 million dollars in the development of the Harlem Piers Area.

The Columbia plan calls for the construction of a platform three stories high, covering the entire area from 125th to 137th Street, from the riverside viaduct to the elevated subway. The platform will provide 3 million square feet of industrial space. On top of the platform, six 42-story circular apartment towers are planned, as well as two large office-laboratory buildings - one on 125th Street, the other running from 130th to 135th on Broadway.

The industries presently on the site - the bus terminal, taxi garages, etc. - are to be relocated in the platform. It is hoped that new industries will rent space there also and that the rents will not only pay for the construction of the platform but will also help to lower the cost of the apartment towers.

Columbia has included a scheme for the development of the riverfront area as a park.

The plan does show some imagination. It makes good use of the natural site; the housing is convenient to transportation and has a good view of the river; the waterfront is slated for development as a recreation area, with space for large facilities such as ball fields; expansion of industry (and thus jobs) is encouraged.

COMMUNITY NOT CONSULTED ON PLAN

However, like most of Columbia's development schemes, this plan was drawn up without consulting any of the groups in the surrounding community, all of which have a vital interest in how the Piers Area is developed.

The Morningside Renewal Council long ago designated the Piers Area as relocation for those who will inevitably be forced out of the Heights by urban renewal. Although the Columbia plan does call for some low and moderate-rent units, as well as luxury apartments, it is still unlikely that many families from the area could hope to be housed there. If Columbia adopts its usual policy in buildings it controls, then only Columbia faculty and personnel will be accepted as tenants anyway.

The plan calls for the development of a park, but there are no guarantees that it will be open at any time to anyone who wants to use it. (Columbia has already taken over part of Morningside Park and restricted its use by Harlem residents.)

Columbia has called for new industries on the site, but there are no guarantees that these will be firms that would use and upgrade the skills of people in the Harlem area.

The development of the Piers Area should be used to create jobs and housing for area residents, to stimulate economic improvements throughout Harlem; is this a goal of the Columbia plan?

Private conversations with staff members of the Housing and Redevelopment Board (HRB) suggest that the HRB is favorable to Columbia's plan. However, at present the HRB is applying for funds to study the feasibility of urban renewal in the area, and so cannot act officially on the Columbia plan.

Unless the community demands a voice in the development of this important area - one of the few pieces of land still available for jobs and low-income housing - it will go by default to the large institutions on the Heights.

To help prevent this, Pleasant Homes, a cooperative apartment building adjacent to 125th Street, is calling a meeting of community leaders on Wednesday night, October 25th in the Board Room of Pleasant Homes at 552 Riverside Drive. At that time, various plans for the Piers Area will be discussed and an action strategy decided upon.

Columbia has already taken over too much of Harlem for its own purposes. Let's make sure it doesn't happen again.

City Actions Planned For Milbank

On September 21, 1967, the City submitted to the Board of Estimate a list of sites in the Milbank-Frawley Circle area and a plan for action. Following are the sites approved by the Board and the uses which are proposed for them.

Clearance and redevelopment for low-income housing:

Site 6 - 33 through 39 and 65 West 118th Street

Site 7A and 7B - part of Taft Houses site

Site 8 - part of Foster Houses site

Site 9 - 71 East 119th St., 60 through 66 East 120th St.; P. S. 103

Clearance and redevelopment for moderate-income housing:

Site 1 - City-owned school playground on west side of Fifth, 117th to 118th

Site 10 - vacant lot on east side of 122nd Street, between Madison and Park

Site 11 - 4 through 20 East 117th Street

Site 13 - 60 through 66 East 118th Street

Clearance and redevelopment for community facilities:

Site 20C - 30 through 60 West 117th Street

Rehabilitation of low or moderate-income housing:

Site 14A - 8 through 56 West 111th Street

Site 15B - 4 through 24 West 117th Street

Site 17D - 6 through 34 East 119th Street

Site 18E - 18 through 22 East 118th Street

Site 19F - 1869 and 1881 Madison Avenue; 55 through 79 East 121st Street; 1748 through 1754 Park Avenue; 50 through 78 East 122nd Street

Site 5 - 3 through 21 East 117th Street; 10 through 16 East 118th Street

WHO PARTICIPATES IN MILBANK-FRAWLEY CIRCLE?

The Milbank-Frawley Circle area was designated for urban renewal by the City in November, 1966. Urban Renewal for Milbank-Frawley Circle can mean improved housing through rehabilitation and new construction, and jobs for the unemployed and underemployed in the area. It can also mean very high rents, tenants being forced out of the area and no jobs for community people.

The one tool the community has to fight with is the Milbank-Frawley Circle Housing Council. Through this, the community can demand rents that the people can afford and jobs for community residents.

The City's application for the Milbank-Frawley Circle urban renewal area has been approved by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The City now has $945,000 for planning the area. They will contract with their own consultants to plan for Milbank-Frawley Circle. They say the planning stage will only take about nine months. Already plans are being made for the area. Some of the things being considered for Milbank are a multi-service center, a teacher training institution, a para-medical college and the expansion of hospitals.

Unless the community pulls together, stops fighting among themselves and demands the rights of all communities to participate in the planning of their area, the City will make all of the decisions.

WHAT OTHER RENEWAL AREAS HAVE

In the East Harlem Triangle area, the community demanded monies to do their own planning. The City gave the community a contract to coordinate planning for the area and let them pick their own consultants. (See story on page 4.)

In the Morningside area, the community demanded and got from the City the money for an office, a community organizer and $10,000 to hire their own planner. His job is to see that the plan the City is drawing up for the area is in line with what the community wants.

Milbank has none of these things and will not have them unless the community unites to demand them. The City would like to see the community involved in internal fighting. Then they can step in and do what they want. They can say to HUD that they gave the community the opportunity to participate in the planning, but they spent most of their time fighting among themselves.

The only way Milbank-Frawley Circle will have maximum community participation is by showing the City officials that they are united in their demands for a bet-

Harlem CORE Fights For Separate School System

On June 9, Roy Innis and Victor Solomon of Harlem CORE spoke before the State Constitutional Convention Committee of the need for an independent school system for Harlem.

They proposed a change in the law which would allow Harlem to have its own Board of Education, with all the powers and responsibilities of the City-wide Board. One of the delegates present was apparently impressed by what was said and drafted a bill which would make this possible.

On August 25th, Innis and Solomon met with the State Commissioner of Education, James Allen, to talk about the bill. Commissioner Allen told the group that he was fully in favor of an Independent Harlem School System. Many other delegates to the convention also said that they supported the proposal.

However, when the Convention ended in the last week of September, the bill had not reached the floor for discussion. It had remained bottled up in the Rules Committee. Delegates to the Convention who had once been in favor of acting on the bill were saying in private that it was not a constitutional issue and should be left to the state legislature to decide.

KENNETH CLARK OPPOSES CORE PLAN

CORE officials claim that the major reason for this change of heart is the fact that Dr. Kenneth Clark is known to oppose the CORE plan — he sees it as a roadblock to the goal of integrated education. Dr. Clark's position as the only black man on New York's Board of Regents (which sets educational policy for the State) gives him a great deal of influence.

CORE officials maintain that efforts to achieve integration in the New York City schools have failed, and that the present school system does not work for black people. What is needed now, they say, is a push for quality education for black youth. For several reasons, they feel that a Harlem Board of Education is the only way to get this.

A Harlem Board, CORE claims, would not be an entrenched bureaucracy like the present Board and so would be open to new ideas and programs; it would not be dealing with two groups whose interests conflict; people from Harlem would not see it as an outside institution that does not have their best interests at heart, and so would be more willing to participate actively in building better schools.

Harlem CORE intends to continue its fight for an independent Harlem school system. It will bring the proposal to the Mayor's Task Force on Education and to the state legislature when it convenes in January. They ask Harlem residents to support their efforts by writing letters to the Mayor and to representatives in Albany, endorsing the proposal for a Harlem Board of Education — for better schools for Harlem youth.

TRIANGLE CITIZENS CONTRACT TO GUIDE URBAN RENEWAL

About October 1, a Feasibility Study will get under way in the area known as the East Harlem Triangle (east of Park Avenue, north of 125th Street). It will be administered directly by the Community Association of the East Harlem Triangle. Technically, this nine-month study will determine whether urban renewal is possible in the Triangle; practically, it is intended to produce at least the outline of the shape that renewal will take.

Thus ends six years of struggle and frustration. It was in June, 1961, that the New York City Planning Commission officially scheduled the area for study. The original idea was to change the Triangle from mixed land usage to complete industrial usage. Angry citizens protested this plan, and, as a result, the Planning Commission changed its proposal to include housing "on the periphery."

The Community Association of the East Harlem Triangle, which grew out of community feeling about the plan, began arguing with city agencies that if urban renewal was to be meaningful, it must focus on "human renewal." Studies done by the Association showed that the majority of Triangle residents could not be easily relocated. They were not only economically disadvantaged but also had a number of serious social problems. Many families had already been relocated as many as seven times for so-called "improvements" to the city.

Mrs. Alice Kornegay, President of the Community Association of the East Harlem Triangle, receives $164,000 Federal grant from Jason Nathan, Housing and Development Administrator, for study of redevelopment in the Triangle.

COMMUNITY GETS CITY TO CHANGE PLANS

From the beginning, the Association and its articulate President, Alice Kornegay, demanded that any studies done emphasize human needs and their potential solution. This was still a foreign idea to city planners. Gradually, however, agreement was reached on the outline of a "feasibility study" which would analyze the population in detail and result in specific proposals for the creation of job opportunities, decent housing and new community facilities.

This proposal was submitted to Washington and finally approved in 1964. A well-known sociologist was chosen by the City's Housing and Redevelopment Board to do the study. Almost two years passed in fruitless contract negotiations between the sociologist and the City. All this time, the community's physical condition deteriorated and morale declined.

Finally in the Spring of 1966, the Association demanded that contract negotiations either be completed or ended immediately. Since no agreement seemed possible, the Housing and Redevelopment Board asked the community for alternate proposals. "Why not let us do the study ourselves?" someone suggested, and the HRB quickly agreed - in principle.

Soon afterward there was a change in leadership at HRB and the promise to the community was reconsidered. "Don't try to do the study without us," Association representatives said, pointing out that people were so sick of being studied that they would probably refuse to cooperate if the Association did not support the feasibility study.

CITY GIVES CONTRACT TO COMMUNITY

The HRB then agreed to give the Association itself a contract to participate in the study, and to accept the Association's recommendations for "expert" consultants, provided they met the necessary qualifications. Two basic areas of responsiblity were spelled out:

First, the Association will provide the adminstration and coordination of the whole study. ARCH, which will do the physical studies, and Social Dynamics Corporation, which will do the socio-economic studies, will look to the Association to see that all parts of the study fit together and a unified plan results.

Second, the Association will be responsible for preparing the community for the study and for interpreting its findings and proposals to the community. As its corps of workers make contact with local residents, the Association will expand its referral services for those with problems and will help citizens in developing action programs.

The Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development agreed with this over-all outline and approved a grant of $164,598 in June, 1967.

How all this will work out in practice remains to be seen. But it is an exciting prospect. No other community group in the country has so much control over the urban renewal process in its area. As Jason Nathan, Housing and Development Administrator of New York City, recently said, "With this study the City will really be planning with the people. Their desire and perseverance helped secure the grant and they, through their role as coordinators, will be invoved with all the recommendations which grow out of the study."

CREDIT CAN CAUSE PROBLEMS

LENDING MONEY IS BIG BUSINESS. The wise consumer finds out how much interest he has to pay before he signs for a loan. (Interest is the extra amount you pay for the privilege of borrowing money or buying on installment.)

The popular saying is, "Sign right here." Many people end up being sorry they didn't read and get some information before they signed the contract.

Buying on the installment plan is one way to borrow money. Many people buy on the installment plan because it is the easiest and quickest way to get appliances, furniture, cars, etc. You would probably save money, however, if you shopped for credit like most women shop for a pair of shoes.

It is hard to find out how much you are actually paying when you buy on the installment plan. High interest rates are hidden in the monthly payments. Credit unions and banks usually offer the buyer better terms and fairer interest rates.

Take John Jones, a young married man who wants to buy some furniture. If he buys on the installment plan, he will pay $25 a month for 20 months for a living room set. He multiplies the amount of each monthly payment by the number of months he has to pay ($25 x 20 months). He finds the bill will be $500. Then he looks at the price tag on the living room set and sees that if he paid cash, the furniture would cost only $425. So John would be paying $75 more than the value of the furniture if he bought it on the installment plan.

John goes to a credit union to find out how much it will cost him to borrow the cash for the living room set. "That sounds great," John says. The next day he joined the credit union and borrowed the money to buy his furniture.

A credit union is a useful organization. Many churches, lodges, companies, housing and neighborhood groups join. There is a credit union you can join.

To find out more about this and other consumer information, contact the Harlem Consumer Education Council, 200 West 135th Street, AU 6-1100.

When you want to borrow money, check out your bank or the credit union to see how much interest you pay them compared with what you will pay on the installment plan. This may be stated in different ways. An automobile dealer may say, "You pay $7 per $100." That means that if you borrow $100, you pay the dealer an extra $7 or a total of $107; a bank may say, "You pay 6% interest per year on $100." 6% of $100 is $6. A small loan company might say, "You pay 2-1/2% interest per month." Since a loan will usually not be paid back for many months, the rate of interest will end up being much, much higher than 2-1/2%.

The person who values his dollars and checks all of these things first will not be cheated. The person who signs before he read will.

On Thursday and Friday, November 2nd and 3rd, the Consumers Assembly will meet in Washington, D.C. to discuss these and other problems such as drug and food prices and the mounting cost of car insurance. People from all over the country will be there. A group from Harlem is going; if you are interested in joining them (we hope you are), please call me at AU 6-1100 to make arrangements. The trip will cost $35, which includes round-trip fare to Washington, two lunches and one night's hotel.

Local Contractors Fight to Survive

by Andrew Gainer

Black contractors in Harlem and other ghetto areas have to struggle just to survive. They don often get jobs from government agencies - or even from their own communities.

Yet these black businesses perform a very special function. A white firm will always hire a skilled man - black or white - but won't often take a chance on someone who is untrained; it is the black businesses that hire unskilled men. Government agencies should recognize this unique job training opportunity provided by black companies and offer them aid and assistance to train unskilled labor.

Government agencies should demand that government money in ghetto areas be used to assist ghetto companies to prepare local residents to become productive members of society. In this way, the maximum benefits from federal spending, would be guaranteed.

GOV'T. IGNORES LOCAL BUSINESS

Yet most government-financed programs aimed at changing conditions in the ghetto do NOT support ghetto businesses. You only have to look at the city records to see that three or four companies from outside the area reap all the benefits. The Welfare Department moving scandal and the Housing Authority painting scandal do not give us much reason to trust the "good faith" of government agencies that are supposed to be concerned with the ghetto communities. Even projects like the Emergency Repair Program, which specifically call for using local contractors, do not really do so.

The family of former Buildings Department head, Charles Moerdler, owns extensive properties in ghetto areas. After the newspapers exposed the many violations existing in the buildings, all contractors hired to do the repairs were non-black.

Members of our own community are guilty of the same lack of support of local businesses. Negro property-owners who have gotten government financing for renovation or repairs to their buildings feel no obligation to create opportunities for jobs and training by using ghetto businesses.

For example, The Brickwood Construction Co., a local black-owned business, received wide recognition for its well-done renovation job on the Apollo Theater. Yet a local, Negro-owned furniture store did not see fit to request a bid from Brickwood for some work they were having done.

Local churches and community groups have also been known to ignore local businessmen who are, in some cases, their own members. The numerous jobs created by changes in building code requirements are given to companies from outside the area with no black people on their payrolls. I do recognize the fact that some local groups want to support local business but cannot because they are funded by the anti-poverty program and must submit vouchers for purchases before they can receive money. They are unable to pay cash and are forced to give their business to firms that can afford to carry their credit for 60, 90 or 120 days. To remedy this deplorable state of affairs, government agencies should set up a revolving fund so that local groups can draw short-term money to make local purchases and repay the fund when their vouchers are reimbursed.

It is in the community's interest to support local contractors. By doing so, the buying power of the local contractor is increased, placing him in a position to demand a better price from his suppliers and so deliver at a lower cost. (I can verify the fact that there is a double price standard on supplies for black and white contractors: a black contractor, even when paying in cash, will be charged more for the same amount than a white contractor.)

HARLEM SHUNS ITS OWN BUSINESSMEN

Supporting local business helps the whole community become more economically sound, but our community does not seem willing to do this. Unless there is soon a new idea of the responsibility of the affluent toward the less fortunate in the community, the next revolution will be black against black.

The Presidents of our two local banks control real estate in Harlem, but do not give due consideration to local contractors -- even though they are well aware of our economic plight. Any local bank that asks for deposits under the banner of assisting the community economically and yet does not work hard at directing purchases and services to local business is guilty of deception.

Other banks with branches in the community use our savings to make loans and investments while at the same time they refuse mortgages to ghetto property-owners. I strongly recommend that community depositors line up and withdraw their savings from these banks -- this is the only way to change their attitude about their responsibilities to the Harlem community.

The institutions around us must also be made to see their responsibility. Columbia University agreed to use the services of Harlem businessmen. To date, they have not made good on this promise. Actually, I have done some jobs for Columbia, but I got them through the back door -- as a subcontractor to a local white company. (I thought when I left Florida that I wouldn't have to use the back door anymore.)

THANKS RIOTERS FOR CHANGE

But, there have been some changes in the last few years. We owe our thanks to the kids who riot. They've opened doors for businessmen that our civil rights leadership should have. The Urban League and the NAACP will picket for me in hotels and at lunch counters, even help me get a job -- but they'll do nothing about opening up business opportunities for our community.

Contrary to what is said in the press, the Negro does not want the white businessman to leave the ghetto areas. He only wishes the white merchant to move over and allow him to emerge.

The emerging Negro businessman will only find understanding and, in most cases, help, advice and assistance among the white businessmen. There is such a great degree of unawareness of business among his own people. I recall 15 years ago I was attempting to buy a truck. I needed a co-maker on my note. I could not get one person that knew me to offer me this help. A white merchant, Mr. Irving Gassman, heard of my plight and immediately went to the bank and signed for me. On several occasions when short-term money is needed to meet an emergency, I have turned to Mr. Gassman. Without this type of understanding and assistance, I would have been in real trouble.

We need to be surrounded by this type of business awareness in the community to help the Negro businessman to be a success.

It must be recognized that in the business world the Negro is an infant competing in a world of giants, but compete he must -- not only for his own success but because on his success hinges th future of American cities. Whatever is necessary for him to compete successfully, we are obligated to offer -- from financial and moral support to technical information and understanding.

Businessman's Harlem – white outpost in the black man's land.

BLACK $ $ $ POWER

Harlem Commonwealth Council Formed

by Roy Innis

One of the great needs of black people is for control of their own institutions. Along with education, the most crucial ones to capture are the economic institutions. I do not have to elaborate on the fact that business in Harlem is largely owned by whites: there are almost no black-owned businesses along the main street of commerce in Harlem. Many people talk about the need to build black businesses, some attempts have even been made - but all of them fall short of a concerted, coordinated effort.

What is needed is a central economic institution to coordinate planning and development in this area. It is with this thought that the Harlem Commonwealth Council has been put together.

Harlem Business Development Group Formed

HCC is a non-profit, tax exempt corporation funded with a demonstration grant from OEO and composed of young black cats, all active in the Harlem community. We represent a public-spirited, community-oriented kind of leadership that we hope is the wave of the future. Many have talked for years about black economic development; we are going to do something about it.

Following is a list of the members of the Harlem Commonwealth Council: Roy Innis, Chairman of Harlem CORE, is Executive Director; Isaiah Robinson of the Harlem Parents Committee is Chairman of the Board; Preston Wilcox, advisor to many Harlem groups, is Vice Chairman; Kenneth Marshall, formerly of Haryou and now Vice President of MARC, is Secretary / Treasurer. Other members of the Council are Kenneth Simmons, a member of the Board of ARCH; Marshall England, President of the Central Harlem Community Corporation; Billy Rolle of the United Block Association; and Arthur Hill, Deputy Inspector of the 28th Precinct.

Our intention is to make a thorough analysis of the Harlem economy to determine what exists now and what the potential for growth is. This research is being carried out by two teams of development economists - one at the New School for Social Research, the other at Columbia. The information gathered by them will be coordinated and analyzed by the Harlem Commonwealth Council, (HCC).

Based on this information, HCC will develop plans for bolstering existing businesses and creating new ones. In order to do this, it will be necessary to create a central investing agency, possibly in the form of a Small Business Investment Company (SBIC) or a Local Development Company. We will seek funds for this primarily from the black community by selling shares in the investment company in small blocks of from $5 to $25, so that the average Harlem citizen can participate. We count on larger chunks from other Harlem investors, but in no case will the control of the institution pass from

by John Henrik Clarke, Guest Editor

Harlem has been called the cultural and intellectual capital of the black race in the Western world. It has also been called other names less complimentary -- names like: "a cancer in the heart of a city" . . . and "a large-scale laboratory experiment in the race problem." Some of the most colorful and dynamic personalities in the Negro world have used Harlem as a platform and proving ground for their ideas and ambitions. The "Back to Africa' movement and the more vocal aspects of Black Nationalism find a greater acceptance in Harlem than in any other place. This cannot be understood without some knowledge of how and why Harlem came into being in the first place.

Sometime in 1626 when what is now New York City was a Dutch outpost called New Amsterdam, eleven Africans were imported and assigned quarters on the fringe of what is now The Bowery. These black laborers eventually built a wagon road to a place in the upper part of the settlement that the Dutch called "Haarlem." About 274 years passed before Harlem (now spelled with one "a") was changed into a Negro metropolis.

Eighteen years after their arrival, the eleven Africans petitioned the Dutch authorities, with the support of the rank and file colonists, and were finally granted their freedom. The liberated men, who now had wives, settled in a swamp, known today as Greenwich Village. They built this swamp into a prosperous community and attracted other settlers.

The peaceful relations between the Africans and the white settlers came to an end when the British gained control of New Amsterdam in 1664, and introduced chattel slavery.

In 1741, an African named Caesar led the first slave uprising in New York. In 1799, more than a half century before Lincoln's proclamation, a bill was passed in New York beginning the gradual emancipation of slaves.

The first independent act of these slaves after the end of slavery in the North was to break away from the Methodist Episcopal Church and start the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. After the Civil War, Negroes moved further uptown, but they were still a long way from Harlem.

The mass exodus and settlement of Negroes in Harlem started in 1900, after New York's fourth disastrous race riot. One of the spiritual leaders of the movement to Harlem was the Reverend Adam Clayton Powell, Sr., father of the Congressman. The Harlem they came to around 1900 was a cheerful neighborhood of broad streets, brownstone dwellings and large apartment houses. Thoroughbred horses were seen on Lenox Avenue and polo was actually being played at the Polo Grounds.

Bert Williams, the famous actor and comedian and Harry T. Burleigh, the composer, had moved to Harlem ahead of the mass movement. By 1910, the white residents of Harlem were in full flight.

The early Twenties was a time of great change and accomplishment in the Harlem community. It was the period when Harlem was literally "put on the map." Two events made this possible; a literary movement known as the Harlem Renaissance, and the arrival in Harlem of the magnetic and compelling personality, Marcus Aurelious Garvey.

In the years after the Second World War, Harlem became a community in decline. Many old residents, now successful enough to afford a better neighborhood, moved to Westchester, Long Island or Connecticut. The community leaders who had helped to make Harlem the cultural center of Black America had either died or moved away.

Harlem is not now a self-contained community. It is owned and controlled by outsiders. It is a black community with a white economic heartbeat. Of the major retail outlets, national chains and local merchants, only a handful are Negro-owned. In the raging battle for integration and equal job opportunities for Negroes, little is heard about the Negroes' long fight to gain control of their community. A system of pure economic colonialism exists in the Harlem community. This colonialism extends into politics, religion and every money-making endeavor that touches the life of a Harlem resident.

This kind of exploitation in Harlem, and in other black communities, has helped to produce a phenomenon called Black Nationalism. This phenomenon brings into focus the conflicts, frustrations and crises encountered by Harlem's inhabitants, both outside their immediate environment and among themselves.

Harlem is a six-square-mile area in Manhattan's geographical heart containing half of New York's million-plus Negroes. It is a microcosm of the Negro in the North. It is a community in transition, searching for its proper place in the Negro Revolution.

Reading Scores Show School Failure

On November 2nd, The New York Times published the scores for the reading comprehension tests given last April in the City's elementary, intermediate and junior high schools.

Out of the 38 Harlem elementary schools, 29 had second grade reading levels well below the national average.

Out of 38 Harlem elementary schools, 37 had fifth grade reading scores well below standard.

The situation was even worse in the intermediate and junior high schools.

Since the reported scores do not include Spanish-speaking children, things are even worse than the figures suggest.

Dr. Bernard Donovan, Superintendent of the City's schools, was asked why some schools in ghetto areas, such as P.S. 129 and P.S. 192 in Harlem had better scores than other ghetto schools. He is quoted as saying that the differences are due to the "creative leadership of the principal."

How is your child's principal doing?

CITY SEEKS HOUSING SPONSORS

In the middle of October, the New York City Housing and Development Administration published announcements in the newspapers inviting "qualified" community organizations to participate in the Model Cities Program as sponsors of new or rehabilitated housing.

The sites for this vest pocket housing have already been selected. In Harlem, they are all within the Milbank-Frawley Circle Urban Renewal area - a list appeared on page 3 of the October issue of Harlem News. The sites will provide a total of 1,080 units of low and moderate rent housing.

Control of housing and planning is crucial if there is to be change in the Harlem community. Token participation is not enough. Recognition by government agencies that community groups can own and manage their own buildings is well worth fighting for.

Any organization interested in acting as a sponsor for housing is asked to submit a letter to the Housing and Development Administration (Bureau of Project Development, Model Cities Program, 2 Lafayette St.) stating that they wish to do so. Letters must be signed by an officer of the organization and should include a statement giving the history and background of the group and mentioning its role and achievements in the community.

For some time now, ARCH has been helping groups interested in sponsoring housing construction and rehabilitation. We are anxious to give architectural and legal assistance to new groups.

If you would like information about the responsibilities of a sponsor, how the programs work, etc., please call us at 427-2450 or drop by the office at 306 Lenox Avenue, room 312 (corner 125th Street).

Board of Education Tests Ethnic Distance

Recently, the Board of Education developed a test which is supposed to measure something called "ethnic distance" among young children. The test was to be given to first, second and third grade classes. Some children who took the test told their parents about it. The parents objected so violently that the test has been dropped.

The manual describes the test as follows: "The scale is made up of a series of short stories which are read to the class by the teacher. Each story has a 'hero' or a 'villain'. After the teacher reads a story, the children indicate with a crayon X whether the hero (or villain) is white, Negro or Spanish speaking. They do this by marking a circle which means that the child in the story has (a) white skin; (b) black skin; (c) trouble speaking English." (Puerto Rican parents may not be pleased by the fact that the Board describes their children simply as "having trouble speaking English.")

The idea behind the test is that if the children are prejudiced they will see their own ethnic group as good, and either or both of the other two groups as bad. Following are some examples of the stories the children were given:

"Some children were playing ball in the school yard. One of the children missed the ball. The other children said, 'You're out.' The child who missed the ball said, 'I'm not out' and he began to call the other children bad names. Oh, what bad things that child said. Which child do you think called the other children bad names?"

"The teacher sent a child on an errand in the school. The child was walking down the hall and there, on the floor, was an envelope. There was money inside the envelope. There were some dollars and some quarters and some dimes. The child ran back to the teacher and gave her the money. 'You are an honest child,' said the teacher. 'I will find out whose money this is.' Which child do you think found the money?"

"The teacher sent another child on an errand and, sure enough, there was another envelope with money on the floor. The child looked around. No one was watching. The child decided to keep the money and not tell the teacher about finding it. Which child kept the money?"

According to the Board of Education's test manual, the purpose of this test is to help answer the following question: "Do six, seven and eight year old children demonstrate less prejudice when they are in an ethnically balanced classroom than when they are in an ethnically segregated classroom?"

After seeing the test, one can't help feeling that if the children were not prejudiced before the test, they would be afterwards.

ARCH TEST FOR PARENTS

One day some men at The Board of Education decided to test your children. They wanted to know about your children's 'ethnic distance.' Oh what bad stories those men wrote. Did the men have (a) white skin; (b) black skin; (c) trouble speaking English?

Harlem Commonwealth Council A Boost To Black Business !!

the hands of the small investor. Control-free funds will also be sought from private foundations. We have tentative commitments from industry for two types of financial support: "seed money" and low-interest loans. Again, control-free. If an SBIC is used as the financing instrument, capital will also be received from the federal government at the rate of $2 for each $1 we raise!

Seeks Ownership, Not Just Jobs

What makes the Harlem Commonwealth Council so different from other such efforts is that we are not trying just to create more jobs. We recognize that there are at least two factors in the production and creation of wealth - labor and capital. We feel that if black people take part in only one of these - labor - then there is no way to break the cycle of poverty. The rule here in America has been that whoever owns the instruments of capital receives the greatest share of the goods and services produced by them. So, if we intend to really gain, we must seek more than a job - we must seek ownership of the industries that provide the jobs.

Many of Harlem's men are potential successful entrepreneurs. They are familiar with the difficulty of getting even a small amount of capital for the expansion of a business or for starting a new one. They know the roadblocks that are thrown up by the various public agencies such as the Small Business Administration, and the private ones such as our banks (even those established for the purpose of aiding the small black businessman). I personally have had an experience with the Interracial Council for Business Opportunities; I took a group of Harlem businessmen to them for financial assistance. The group was interested in forming an association so they could conduct business in a more efficient manner. We never got that help - in fact, we didn't even get a reply until three months after our meeting; all this, after glowing promises from them.

HCC is designed to avoid this sort of thing. As soon as our investment fund is developed, we'll be able to shortcut many of these processes and see that people get help when they need it.

Another of the serious problems facing our businessmen is the inability to obtain certain business expertise. HCC also intends to provide help in this area. For every business we help or help set up, we will train managerial personnel. We will also maintain close ties with the organization after it gets off the ground so that we can give assistance with any problems that might crop up.

We fully intend to create the essential economic institution that Harlem so sorely needs - a source of ready investment capital. If you would like more information about HCC or if we can assist you in any way, please come by our office at 306 Lenox Avenue, Room 301, or call us at 876-5721. We do mean business!

Lindsay Panel Calls for Community Schools

The Mayor's special panel on school decentralization, headed by McGeorge Bundy of The Ford Foundation, has called for:

- The replacement or reorganization of The Board of Education.
- The establishment of 30 to 60 community school districts headed by an 11-man school board with broad powers. (Six members of the school board would be selected by parents, the other five by the Mayor.)
- Control by the community school boards over the selection of the school superintendent (who would serve under contract); recruitment and selection of staff; curriculum policy; zoning and pupil assignment; budget matters.

The Board of Education and the teachers' union will fight this proposal. If you want community-run schools, write to the Mayor and your representatives in the state legislature and demand control over the education of your child.

COOPERATION: IS 10

by Edna Rust and Luther Seabrook

Dr. Sidney Rosenberg, Superintendent of School District 6, and Dr. Roderick Loney, Chairman of the I.S. 10 Community Planning Committee, are both in agreement about the building of a community school.

In an unusual experiment, the Committee, made up of interested individuals and community groups from the district as well as the Board of Education, has charge of planning a community school, Intermediate School 10. I.S. 10 is being built at 148th Street and 7th Avenue and is scheduled to open in February of 1969. The intermediate school is a new idea in education. Children attend from the ages of 10 or 11 through 14, usually grades five through eight. For better educational results, there is an emphasis on "individualized" instruction, based on the needs of the students.

LOCAL GROUPS SHARE IN PLANNING NEW SCHOOL

Over 31 community organizations are represented on the Planning Committee. The working subcommittees are:

Curriculum, Scheduling and Articulation. This subcommittee has been charged with finding creative, meaningful, new approaches to education. It will also deal with the curriculum of the elementary schools feeding into I.S. 10.

Personnel, Staff Training and Development. This group will consider the criteria for selection of teachers and supervisors for I.S. 10 and draw up guidelines for orientation and continuous training for teachers and supervisors.

Parents and Community. They will make recommendations for effective involvement of the parents and community in the affairs of the school.

Special Services and Instructional Materials. This subcommittee will familiarize itself with new materials and concepts in education and make recommendations about what should be adopted.

Evaluation. This subcommittee will concern itself with the total educational program of the school.

The Committee is planning a program that will make use of the school building from 14 to 16 hours a day during the school week, with week-end educational and recreational programs also planned. Special emphasis is being given to space for community-involved programs and for innovative teaching devices and training.

The Committee has been meeting now for approximately 10 months and is moving on schedule. The Committee feels that with the interest and cooperation of everyone, I.S. 10 will offer an educational program of true excellence for the entire community. Although the primary function of the Community Planning Committee was the planning for I.S. 10, as a result of community requests the Committee has also involved itself in other educational problems in District 6.

DR. LONEY RESPONSIBLE FOR PROJECT'S SUCCESS

One of the major reasons for the success of the Committee has been its dynamic chairman, Dr. Roderick Loney, who is typical of the new young leaders of Harlem. Dr. Loney spent two years as Director of Education for Harlem Teams for Self-Help and is now Educational Director for Trade Union District 65. He has been very active in organizing efforts aimed at reaching those who are unskilled and uneducated. As chairman of the Planning Committee, he has professional educators, civil rights activists and other community people working together in a cooperative atmosphere to create a program of educational excellence for children.

DISTRICT SUPT. CITES COOPERATION

As Dr. Rosenberg, Superintendent of District 6, says, "With the community and the school working together for our children in this novel preparatory climate of sincere cooperation, we are confident that we may indeed be taking a giant step along the road to our goal of quality education for our children. We are indeed fortunate to have such a dedicated and dynamic chairman as Dr. Roderick Loney. We are also grateful at having so many distinguished members of educational, civic and community groups who so willingly give of their time and energy to the success of this endeavor."

TAKE-OVER: I S 201

by The I.S. 201 Planning Board

On Friday, November 10th, elections will be held for the Governing Board of The I.S. 201 Complex. The Board will be made up of 10 parents, 5 teachers, 5 community representatives and 1 supervisor, and will oversee staff, program and financial matters. Voting will take place from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M. in all five schools within The Complex – I.S. 201, P.S. 39, P.S. 24, P.S. 68, and P.S. 133.

– Ed.

The story of the Harlem School that today is called "I.S. 201" began in 1958 when the Board of Education announced plans to build a new Junior High School in Harlem to relieve overcrowded conditions. Harlem residents demanded that the Board of Education locate the school so that it would draw an integrated student body -- and thereby, hopefully offer black children a better quality of program and instruction than was being provided in segrated Junior High Schools in Harlem. In 1962, the Board and the Community finally agreed to build the school at 127th Street and Madison Avenue, with the assurance that the school would have an integrated student body and a superior program for its students.

In the fall of 1965, with the school building nearing completion, people in Harlem began to demand that the Board of Education make public exactly WHAT its program would be for the school and WHERE the students would come from. The Board of Education would only say, the program would be "SUPERIOR" and the student body "INTEGRATED". Many meetings were held with members of the Board of Education and Government Officials. Because demands were not met, the Harlem Community prevented the new school from opening in April, 1966 and for summer school in June. Finally, when a trip to see United States Commissioner of Education Howe in August, 1966 failed to force the Board of Education to make good its promises for quality integrated education, the Harlem Community demanded a voice in operating the school so that it would not be another inferior ghetto school. (90% of the children are now two to three years behind.)

PARENTS DEMAND A VOICE

For a week after school opened in September, 1966, a ten member Harlem Negotiating Committee and the Board of Education discussed how the school could be operated with "COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION." Children attended their old schools - I.S. 201 remained closed. Finally, an agreement was reached:

A male, Black or Puerto Rican Principal who was acceptable to both the Board and the community would replace Mr. Lisser, the then Principal. (Please note, there are only four Black female and no Puerto Rican Principals in the whole school system out of over 800 plus.)

A Governing Board of parents and community members would be elected to govern the school, jointly with the Board of Education.

This Agreement was announced to the Press.

The next day as the children went to the school for the first time, they found the teachers picketing on the outside. Teachers were supporting their white principal against Black and Puerto Rican parents. The same teachers who have never acted militantly on behalf of Black or Puerto Rican children. Later in the day, without even notifying the negotiating committee, Dr. Donovan reversed his agreement, reinstated Mr. Lisser as Principal and threw out the idea of a Governing Board of community people.

BOARD RENEGES ON AGREEMENT; PARENTS DEMONSTRATE

Many days of demonstrations followed. The fight to gain a voice for the Harlem Community was continued by the I.S. 201 Coordinating Committee, composed of the members of the Negotiating Committee plus other members of the Harlem community interested in working for a "community voice" at I.S. 201. Finally, in January, 1967, discussions began between the I.S. 201 Coordinating Committee, University professors, members of the Ford Foundation and officers of the Teachers Union. In April, an agreement was reached on a Governing Board of parents, teachers and community members to operate I.S. 201 and its four feeder elementary schools. The Ford Foundation promised planning money to enable the I.S. 201 Coordinating Committee to prepare for the election of the Governing Board. After many discussions with the Board of Education, approval for an "Experimental I.S. 201 Complex" was given by the Board of Education and in July, 1967, the Planning Grant was announced.

BOARD AGREES TO I.S. 201 "EXPERIMENT"

The I.S. 201 Coordinating Committee immediately set up a Planning Board composed of four parents and two teachers from each school, five Community Representatives, and a member of the Supervisory Staff. This 36 person Planning Board established committees to study the school program and began preparing for election of the Governing Board to be held soon after school opened. Unfortunately, the Teacher's Union struck. The Planning Board, feeling that the issues in the strike were against the best interests of Black and Puerto Rican children, urged teachers to remain in school and helped recruit community people to man the classrooms of teachers who were on strike. (Teachers who were striking for more power, not better education.) Planning for the election of the Governing Board came to a halt. Bitter feelings developed between the officers of the Teacher's Union and the Planning Board. Planning was set back several weeks.

PARENTS ELECT GOVERNING BOARD NOV. 10th

As the end of October nears, the Planning Board is moving into the final stages of electing a Governing Board. Parents are being registered for voting, teachers, parents and community members are participating in the Candidate Training Workshops to be eligible for election to the Governing Board; final preparations are being completed for the election of the Governing Board to be held on November 10th.

At the same time, these final days before the election of the Governing Board are difficult ones. The Teacher's Union is doing everything in its power, with all of its money, to destroy the I.S. 201 Complex. The Union wants teachers whose first loyalty is to them and not to a Black and a Puerto Rican community and its children. Because of destructive teacher activity in some schools - circulations of petitions AGAINST the Governing Board, intimidation of parents and general undermining of teacher-community cooperation, the election was postponed a week from November 3rd to November 10th.

EFFORTS TO UNDERCUT 201 BOARD

At the same time, certain self-styled "LEADERS" in our own community, jealous of anything new coming into Harlem that they don't control, have been working with the racist union officers to divide the community and destroy the Governing Board.

We believe that the Governing Board, composed of ten parents, five teachers, five community representatives and one supervisor will provide a voice for Black and Puerto Rican parents unequalled anywhere else in our country. This Governing Board will oversee the hiring of staff, program and curriculum policy, evaluation and fiscal matters. This means that for the first time, school professionals will be directly accountable to Black and Puerto Rican parents for the education of Black and Puerto Rican children. The Governing Board will make possible a great measure of control over public education by Black and Puerto Rican people.

I.S. 201 HOLDS HOPE FOR BLACK & PUERTO RICAN CHILDREN

We believe that the success of the Governing Board is a matter of life and/or death - the life or death of Black and Puerto Rican children. Not only in the five schools in the I.S. 201 Complex but all over our nation, Black and Spanish speaking people, poor and minority people are watching I.S. 201 with hope! Powerful oppressors are hopeful that the I.S. 201 Complex will fail. We must unite, stand together and work for the future. At stake are the lives of children all over the United States of America.

Urban Renewal

ONWARD, METRO NORTH!

Lindsay Lethargy Blocks Local Efforts

Most people in the Metro North area (from 96th to 106th Street, from the River to Third Avenue) have lived there a long time. They can remember when it was a really nice community, with better housing and better schools. They know that it is the City's fault that the area has become what it has.

The City designated Metro North for public housing in 1953. The area had become overcrowded, however, and the City saw that relocating people would be a tremendous problem . . . so they tabled the project, without formally rejecting it. Landlords in the area used the City as an excuse to stop putting money into their buildings. Conditions grew increasingly worse and everyone who could, got out. Those who stayed decided that something had to be done.

In 1963, they formed the Metro North Citizens Committee. They soon joined forces with a group of social workers, businessmen and clergymen from the area- making it clear that the professionals were to act only as advisors, not as leaders. Under the banner of the Metro North Association, they organized as many people in Metro North as possible -- tenants, landlords, clergymen, businessmen, representatives of the institutions in the area.

Later the local Catholic and Protestant churches, Union Settlement and the Maremont Foundation formed a non-profit housing corporation to help the citizens carry out rehabilitation in old tenements.

They began a vigorous voter registration campaign to let their politicians and the people downtown know that Metro North was watching them. Then they used local political leaders to get to City Hall.

Mayor Wagner Gives Control To Metro-North

In April of 1964, Carlos Rios, assemblyman for the area at the time, arranged an appointment for the Metro North group with Mayor Wagner. The meeting was set for June. The group spent those six weeks, with the help of architect William Conklin, pulling their thoughts together into a renewal plan for the neighborhood. When they met with the Mayor, they asked two very important questions "Will you recognize the Metro North Association as the spokesman for the community?" "Will you agree that no city agency will plan anything for Metro North without our consultation and approval?"

The Mayor's answer to both these questions was yes.

People in Metro North feel there are several reasons why the Wagner Administration was willing to make this agreement with a community group: one is the fact that the City realized it was largely to blame for the conditions in Metro North. Also, the City could tell at the meeting that the Metro North Association did represent a cross-section of community interests.

Mayor Wagner moved on his agreement by instructing all his top agency men - those in housing, the Department of Welfare, the Board of Education, the Dept. of Parks, etc. - to deal directly with the Metro North Association. For three years, the City agencies and the Metro North community hashed out what could be done. This worked out well because it was coordinated - all of the agencies worked together and all worked with the community.

Church of The Resurrection stands as hope for a better Metro-North

Plans moved steadily, though slowly.

Trouble With Mayor Lindsay

Then in early January of 1966, the new mayor sent 3 of his commissioners to visit Metro North. He did not come himself. By this gesture, he showed his interest, but he did not give vigorous, coordinated support. People in Metro North are back where they began -- fighting their way to the top of each agency, trying to persuade them that physical renewal has got to be tied to programs directed at social needs. They complain bitterly of the complete lack of coordination between the Housing Development Administration and the Human Resources Administration. For example, a job program run successfully over the summer was not refunded this fall. "How can we improve housing and raise rents," people ask, "unless we also do something about raising incomes? The City refuses to see that programs like this are vital to our other efforts."

In addition to its problems with the City, Metro North is also caught up in East Harlem "poverty politics." The Committee of 19, which controls anti-poverty money for the area, has scuttled all but one of the Metro North programs. People from Metro North feel that this is because the Committee is dominated by the area's two large agencies, MEND and the East Harlem Tenants Council. They feel the Committee has turned its back on the smaller groups in the area and has lost touch with the people and their needs.

Unity In Metro-North Gets Things Done

In spite of these difficulties, the Metro North group continues its efforts to rebuild the community. Although city and local agencies present problems, Metro North itself remains united and because of that; it has managed to do more in its area than most other organizations in Harlem. A total of 1,066 new and rehabilitated apartments will be complete within a few years, including a new small public housing project planned by Metro North with the New York City Housing Authority; a narcotics rehabilitation center and a series of small parks are also definitely planned; a "humane" relocation program, supported by federal funds, has helped about 375 families move to new -- and better -- housing.

Metro North has gotten a lot done - with a minimum of internal fighting. People in the area point out two reasons why this is so. The Metro North Citizens Committee makes it a policy to remain self-supporting. Although many of the projects in the area do receive government funds, the overall organization is supported by the people themselves and so has not been destroyed by struggles over who gets what money. Secondly, there is no one leader in the Metro North area; according to the customs of the Metro North Association, anyone who wishes may develop and run his own program.

If more groups had the unity of the people in Metro North, Harlem would get much more in the way of power and money from government agencies and a lot fewer local political fights.

From Interviews With Mildred Ryan, Bob Montesi and Rev. Norman Eddy

Quotable Quote — from the New York Post, October 30, 1967. "The rift is widening between Negroes and Puerto Ricans who are vying for influence in the City's anti-poverty programs. The victims of rivalry are the poor."

Urban Renewal policy illogical?

Editor, The Daily Times,

I have just returned from a meeting of concerned citizens in the Urban Renewal Area of Gainesville. The area is probably not too unlike many other Renewal Areas across the country and the officials of Housing and Urban Development and Gainesville's Local Public Agency were most precise in defining policy as it related to the many questions that arose from "target area residents" who, not incidentally nor accidentally, are predominantly non-white.

The basic problem that is evident in the Gainesville situation is that Urban Renewal policy itself is illogical and reflects an almost astounding lack of understanding of human and economic conditions found in the Gainesville Renewal Area. I consider the coalition of local and federal employes who first adopted and/or approved the plan for the area to be the first villains to very gently insert the knife called "legal process" into the backs of residents of the area. Is it so important for Gainesville to have a beautiful city that it is willing to create human misery to accomplish it? How long are we going to continue to accept plans developed by white middle-class planners as being good for areas that most of them could really never know?

Consider the case of private homeowners in the area. Let's say that they are given $5,500 for their homes which admittedly are generally either dilapidated or deteriorating. I wonder if federal officials have ever considered:

The basic problem that is [illegible] Gainesville situation is that Urban Renewal policy itself is illogical and reflects an almost astounding lack of understanding of human and economic conditions found in the Gainesville Renewal Area. I consider the coalition of local and federal employes who first adopted and/or approved the plan for the area to be the first villains to very gently insert the knife called "legal process" into the backs of residents of the area. Is it so important for Gainesville to have a beautiful city that it is willing to create human misery to accomplish it? How long are we going to continue to accept plans developed by white middle-class planners as being good for areas that most of them could really never know?

Consider the case of private homeowners in the area. Let's say that they are given $5,500 for their homes which admittedly are generally either dilapidated or deteriorating. I wonder if federal officials have ever considered:

(1) Just where does a displaced Negro move to in a small southern town?

(2) How "fair" a market value is $5,500 when even the model home in the Renewal Area costs over $10,000.

(3) How displaced person feels when he sees his former home rented to someone else.

Of course, what we are really doing is forcing Negroes into public housing because when Urban Renewal finishes with them, they have no other choice, either economically or socially.

One might say that a homeowner does have legal recourse if he doesn't like the LPA's offer for his home, but, again, have federal officials ever considered:

(1) Just how many slum dwellers have a lawyer?

(2) How many would even know how to hire a lawyer?

(3) How deeply legal fees would cut into any potential monetary gains that might result from legal representation.

How about the chances of a person from the Renewal Area purchasing land back from the LPA. . .How many slum dwellers would or could go through this rather complicated process?

My personal feeling is that it is about time for us to admit that traditional programs have failed and start some that will solve human problems rather than creating a beautiful urban facade which covers misery and discontent.

For example, why couldn't we have a program that would go to the heart of the problems in our urban areas — families and homeowners.

I believe that we have been guilty of thinking and planning too big. Gainesville's problems (with a little federal grant and loan innovation) could be solved much better on a block-by-block basis with each housing unit being considered on an individual basis. I also believe that the Model Cities Program will not achieve much in Gainesville unless the focus is narrowed to families and to individual housing units.

Slum dwellers have a difficult enough time under existing conditions, and any action we take should be to help them rather than to make their (family) situation worse.

I'm afraid that our bureaucratic tradition has by means of policy stifled the very persons who, by reason of intellect and program-exposure, could change many of our programs which are sadly lacking of innovation and human understanding.

Atl Const 11-17-68

Editor's note: Earl C. Moses III, an Atlantan and a specialist in community development, is studying city planning at Georgia Tech. He attended a seminar of interest to Georgians in Greece recently. This is his correspondence.

ATHENS—Here in a setting rich with memories of the glories of ancient Greece, and all that has meant to our modern Western Civilization, another Greek has come to speak to the world. His name: Constantinos Doxiadis. His subject: The future of man's cities or human settlements, as he calls them.

Mr. C. F. Palmer, the pioneer in U.S. Public Housing who is my grandfather, Arden Brey and I had the very great honor of unofficially representing Atlanta in an historic seminar given by Dr. Doxiadis July 22-26, 1968.

Last February Doxiadis visited Atlanta and, more specifically, the City Planning Program at Georgia Tech. He then gave a preview of his thoughts. But in this recent forum in Athens, Dr. Doxiadis revealed for the first time a synthesis of the laws of Ekistics (the science of human settlements). This may sound like sophisticated mumbo jumbo, but it is not. It is, instead the result of some of the first attempts to understand in a rational way the totality of the many and complicated forces and characteristics of man's cities or settlements.

Through a process of carefully analyzing the cities of the past in a most practical way, of defining scientifically rather than intuitively the basic needs and-or forces of man, nature, society, physical structures of cities, and networks of cities (e.g. transportation systems), and of continuously being open to question, evaluation, and reevaluation, Dr. Doxiadis begins to create a science or system of understanding which can act as a tool, in the reshaping of our cities for the good of all mankind.

Here is an important point. Contrary to the beliefs of many of Dr. Doxiadis' critics, he does not dogmatically offer a solution to urban chaos. To do so would be for one man to dictate.

Instead, Dioxiadis offers an approach which will yield the greatest number of reasonable alternatives—from which only the people and their elected representatives can choose. Only in this way, believes Dr. Doxiadis, will we ever be able to create urban places where man can be truly happy.

A much more detailed explanation of all this can be found in his book Ekistics, An Introduction to the Science of Human Settlements, Oxford. U. Press, New York.

After participating in nearly 25 hours of concentrated lecturing and sharp discussion and in countless hours of informal talks, after having private conversations in his home, and after hearing the evaluations of fellow conferees from a wide variety of professions and from all over the world, Mr. Palmer and I believe that the contribution of Constantinos A. Doxiadas to the history of man may be profoundly significant.

It would be reasonable to expect that Atlanta, which exhibits the first public housing done in the United States (Techwood Homes) and which today is one of the most exciting and progressive cities in the world, may eventually be influenced by the thoughts and works of Dr. Doxiadis.

BRIDGING THE GAP FROM RHETORIC TO REALITY

THE NEW YORK STATE URBAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BY SAMUEL KAPLAN

"Sure we can rebuild America," said the renewal administrator to the concerned and questioning representative of the League of Women Voters at one of those forums on the city-housing-jobs crisis. "Just give us the right of eminent domain, the power to ignore local zoning and unlimited financing."

Like every urban state, New York has been fighting a losing battle against decay. Its slums are spreading faster than its rate of new construction. Its old commercial cores can no longer compete with suburban shopping centers and are corroding. Its industry is fleeing to the countryside, leaving a potential work force in the cities on unemployment and welfare. It is a mess, as anyone can testify who has toured New York City's South Bronx, Harlem, Brownsville and Bedford Stuyvesant, Buffalo's downtown, Albany's backstreets and the mill towns of the Mohawk Valley.

Urban renewal at best has been an inadequate tool, trying to drain the floor of blight with an eyedropper, and at worst a quagmire, replacing neighborhoods with vacant lots and promises. According to a recent report, New York has 2,741 acres under urban renewal, of which 198 acres are completed projects, 280 acres are in advanced project stages, while the remaining 2,263 acres are in limbo, lacking feasible plans and viable sponsors. The state's renewal effort becomes even more frustrating when measured against the estimated 100,000 acres in substandard condition in and around the cities of New York.

Since it takes on the average 13 years to complete an urban renewal project in New York City and eight years upstate, it would take New York at its present pace about 350 years to eliminate its slums, assuming that their present festering is contained and that new housing starts keep up with demands of the state's burgeoning population. (Of course, both assumptions are optimistic fantasies, given the state of the cities and the economy today, and given the utter lack of a commitment to the housing problem by the federal government.)

New York's renewal experience is not unique. Every urban state is suffering. But the magnitude of New York's problem is such that its failure is more glaring, much to the consternation of Governor Rockefeller, who has prided himself in his administration's herculean rebuilding efforts. Establishing public benefit corporations to avoid bureaucratic pitfalls, and unleashing billions in bonds, the state of New York in the last ten years has built a vast higher education plant, rebuilt its mental health facilities and hospitals, extended its highways and is now tackling mass transportation and water pollution, following a 1967 public vote of confidence in the passage of a multibillion dollar bond package.

With these victories behind and bolstering him, and the chaos of the cities daily front page news, the governor waded into the urban renewal morass two years ago. Ignoring bureaucratic and political pressures to fatten up the lethargic State Division of Housing and Community Renewal, the governor again elected to seek the quasi-government form of the public benefit corporation to get the job done.

He also sought out Edward J. Logue, who has perhaps the best reputation in the nation as an urban administrator dedicated to getting a job done. Logue was then a part-time professor of public administration in Boston and a constant renewal consultant and critic, following an overwhelming rejection by voters in his 1967 bid for the Boston mayoralty. Logue built his national reputation while rebuilding New Haven and Boston; and he had previously toyed with the challenge of New York City when Mayor Lindsay offered him the job of Development Administrator in 1966—after Logue had given Lindsay a report outlining the position and what had to be done. When Lindsay failed to deliver the reforms Logue considered necessary (principally the subjection of the City Planning Commission to a new Development Administration), Logue declined the job. He had been quite excited by the prospect of tackling New York City. But Logue felt he needed some strong teeth to bite into the Big Apple.

Working as consultant to Governor Rockefeller, he translated the reforms he considered necessary into an outline of a new state corporation that embodied the fantasies of every renewal administrator in the U.S. The resulting legislative proposal called for a development corporation with vast powers which would allow it to condemn property, to plan new structures or even new cities, to build them if no one else would, to own them and lease or manage them, to receive tax exemptions and, if need be, to ignore local zoning and building codes. In addition, Logue recommended that this development corporation be given $5 million as a starter to cover operating costs, $35 million in "first instance" appropriations to cover planning and project costs prior to permanent financing, and a bond authorization of $1 billion! Two subsidiary sister agencies to the corporation were also proposed: a Corporation for Urban Development and Research, which would plan and initiate demonstration projects; and an Urban Development Guarantee Fund, which would get around some state charter problems in financing and would guarantee mortgage loans in project areas.

Reading more like the recommendations of an "urban workshop" than a serious legislative proposal (especially by a Republican administration), the proposal was greeted with gasps. Legislators, lobbyists and journalists in Albany gave it little chance of success, despite the governor's strong support. There was almost no area for compromise in Logue's package: the state administration held firm on the need of the corporation for absolute powers—particularly its option to ignore local zoning codes, an issue that rallied opponents from Montauk to Niagara Falls. Zoning is the bed rock on which home rule stands, and in New York, as in other states, home rule stands next to God. The package languished, collecting derisive remarks and dust.

On April 6, 1968, the Rev. Martin Luther King was assassinated in Memphis. Governor Rockefeller sent a special message to the Legislature two days later, urging passage of the urban development package—as a tribute and a memorial to the slain civil rights leader—and then flew to Atlanta to attend the funeral. During the afternoon of April 9, the day of the funeral, the proposal passed the Senate, but in the Assembly conservative upstate Republicans joined liberal New York City Democrats in their concern over home rule to defeat the package 85 to 48. Reacting strongly to the rebuff, after the funeral in Atlanta, the governor started making telephone calls, urging, cajoling and threatening legislators to reconsider the vote. Patronage and pet bills were dangled before Assemblymen in a dazzling display of political power by Rockefeller, and within seven hours 40 votes were turned. The package went back before the Assembly at 11:30 that night and was approved 86 to 45. The governor signed the proposal into law the following day, and the most potent government-created apparatus for tackling the problems of urban development was in business in New York State.

"Sure we can rehouse America," said the housing administrator to the angry representative of a community action committee at one of those housing workshops. "Just give us unlimited use of land writedown, interest and rent subsidies, and remove all restrictions from every housing program."

A year and a half has passed since the UDC became a legal entity and Ed Logue no longer slips into the governor's Manhattan office on West 55th Street off Fifth Avenue, but walks boldly into the corporation's modern offices two blocks south, where its executives share the tenth floor with the Ted Bates advertising agency. Following Logue and filling the offices have been many old friends and associates from the good old New Haven and Boston days, among them Robert M. Litke, New York City regional manager, and John Stainton, Rochester area regional manager. They and others have been attracted no doubt by the excitement that surrounds their 48-year-old boss, the autonomy and potential of the agency and, last but not least, the handsome salaries offered.

Parading less boldly into the offices have been mayors, renewal directors, planning commissioners, developers, real estate operators and a host of consultant planners and architects to get a piece of the action and perhaps find a taker for a parcel or a plan. Most of them have not been disappointed. The UDC staff, which has grown from 6 to 160, have reviewed almost every urban renewal project in the state for possible involvement by the corporation, while launching dozens of studies. But as the studies are bound and circulated, and the minutes of the last meeting typed and reviewed, it has become evident to observers and some staff members that the UDC is having problems bridging the gap from rhetoric to reality, particularly its promise to provide low- and moderate-income housing—the UDC's most important objective, according to Logue.

Though it can plan, build and manage any form of housing, it cannot finance subsidized housing, other than to provide short-term construction loans. For low-income housing, it must turn to the local housing authorities and work through their channels to the federal government, acting as any other turnkey developer, hat and plans in hand. To achieve moderate-income housing, it must act as a packager-developer on behalf of a local nonprofit sponsor in applying for FHA mortgages, an increasingly difficult road to travel.

Its position is somewhat better in undertaking middle-income housing, where its legislation directs it to work closely with the State Housing Finance Agency, which provides below market rate mortgages and has at its disposal a variety of rent subsidy tools. But the fact remains that though the UDC can be a constant prodder, especially when headed by Logue, it does not have the final review powers for its housing projects. It will perhaps be able to edge its way to the front of the mortgage commitment line, but nevertheless must stand outside the door while an agency that was bypassed when the UDC package was proposed (and whose staff members earn substantially less than UDC personnel in comparable positions) review their plans.

Architects working on housing studies for the UDC confide that they eventually expect a clash between the HFA and the UDC over design and project costs. Logue has always prided himself in being sensitive to design consideration and that somehow, someway, cost problems can be resolved. On the other hand, the HFA has adhered strictly to cost considerations, with design merely an afterthought. (Co-op City in the Bronx—see Jan./Feb.

'69, page 107—is perhaps the extreme example of the HFA's preoccupation with costs to the exclusion of design.) Architects who have submitted plans to the UDC find themselves caught between the challenge of good design called for by the UDC, and the knowledge—from past experience—of what the HFA will probably do to the drawings later. "The UDC is floating in the air right now. But I am afraid the balloon will burst as soon as HFA costs out the jobs," said one leading architect. "It is an odd situation when we, the architects, have to be constantly reminding the client of cost considerations, but we do."

Furthermore, the UDC does not have any funds for housing subsidies, which have, in these years of rising construction costs and community rejections of public housing, become the only way of squeezing some low- and moderate-income families into new housing and of keeping rents in a reasonable range. Here again the UDC must stand in line for the thimblefull of federal and state subsidies available.

Most constricting, perhaps, is the fact that the UDC also has no land writedown funds of its own, which is the essence of any urban renewal program. This means that the UDC cannot assemble land and, as a renewal agency can, sell or lease it for less than the cost of assemblage, including the purchase price, relocation and demolition, so the buyer or lessee can reduce the cost of development accordingly. Maximum allowable land costs for subsidized housing in cities almost mandates a land writedown. As a result, the UDC will almost always have to work through the local renewal agency in developing inner city sites for subsidized housing.

Though newspapers have labeled the UDC a "super-renewal agency," the lack of a land writedown actually reduces the role of the UDC in cities to that of a developer. But with a bushelful of planning money to seed projects; experienced staff to process papers for local renewal agencies and to move the projects through the bureaucracy; with the resources to build the projects, own them and manage or lease them; and with the option to ignore local building or zoning codes, the UDC is, in fact, a super-developer.

The immediate result has been that the UDC has become what can best be described as the developer-of-the-last resort. Renewal projects across the state that have been vacant lots for years, collecting garbage and defeating incumbents while awaiting a developer with cash in hand, are now being reviewed by the UDC. "There is no doubt about it," said a staff planner, "we are getting the dogs."

After a year of reviewing and negotiating, the UDC has agreements in principal with 11 cities to proceed on projects totaling $600 million in construction. The cities are Amsterdam, Binghamton, Buffalo, Ithaca, Newburgh, Ogdensburg, Ossining, Peekskill, Utica, Yonkers and New York City, which apparently has had some second thoughts after denouncing and almost defeating the UDC in the Legislature.

Most of the projects involve housing, with more than 20,000 units planned, 11,000 of them in New York City. The most ambitious of the projects is the development of the 147-acre Welfare Island, in New York City's East River (October issue), where a new community of 5,000 units of housing in a park setting has been designed by architects Philip Johnson and John Burgee. According to the UDC, its income range formula for almost all the housing is 70 per cent middle-income, 20 per cent low-income and 10 per cent elderly, though it is expected that some communities will suggest different breakdowns. Other projects include parking garages in Ithaca and Syracuse, some industrial and commercial facilities in Yonkers and in and around Buffalo, and recreation areas in New York City. The UDC also is studying and negotiating possible projects in 35 other localities.

The cities could not be more pleased. With a few exceptions, they have been pressed to find developers capable of carrying out the projects. The UDC holds the promise of transforming vacant lots into buildings. However, though not admitting it publicly, the UDC is worried about project feasibility. Its negotiations with the FHA and HFA to pick up the mortgages in all their residential projects is critical, and there are reports that all is not going well. The UDC has expended a good portion of its $35-million "first instance" appropriation on housing, and the only way it will get that money back is if the HFA and the FHA assume the permanent financing and allow the UDC a takeout. As already noted, the UDC can float notes or bonds for short-term financing, making it an excellent middleman for low-income turnkey housing, but the corporation will quickly "self-destruct" economically if it gets into permanent mortgaging for projects that must be subsidized. The UDC just is not geared up to be another housing finance agency.

To be sure, the UDC can permanently finance any type of structure, including schools, sewage plants, shopping centers, firehouses and factories, but it also will have to be assured that it can lease or sell the facility at a rate to meet its debt service on the cost of development and, hopefully, a little more to cover administrative expenses and the cost of those studies that undoubtedly will wash out. According to the legislation, the UDC must borrow its money in the private market, without pledging the full faith and credit of the state. The projects, therefore, must be designed to be financially self-liquidating. This means that a UDC project will have to be attractive enough for other developers to take over once the financing and red tape are resolved and, hopefully, before it goes into construction. Though its legislation allows it to, the UDC does not want to go into the construction business and certainly not into property management. This would tie up its capital and weaken its future bond position, while perplexing the local municipalities, which will not be able to collect full or perhaps even partial taxes on the projects since the UDC is tax exempt. The state has agreed to reimburse the localities for tax losses, but the issue of how much and for what would more than likely involve the UDC in a hornet's nest.

In essence, the UDC wants to become a packager-in-the-public-interest. It would like to limit its role to developing plans, arranging financing and then selling the "package" to a developer, whom it will oversee to assure that the project is carried out as agreed and as expeditiously as possible.

"We are in the position, we believe, to initiate sound development projects and take them to the point where the private sector can step in, take over and build and own them," Ed Logue has said. "If we can, in fact, deliver such packages, we will have enough takers to keep us from becoming a construction agency. The indications we have are that private equity and development capital will be available if we perform our catalytic role properly."

The test will come soon enough as the UDC's first plans become working drawings and its negotiations become contracts. The hope is that private developers will be attracted by various tax incentives written into the corporation's legislation, including tax abatement (with the state making up the difference to the local governments) and tax credits for the creation of new jobs. The UDC is also seeking nonprofit sponsors capable of assuming its moderate-income projects.

Despite these problems, it is obvious that the UDC is performing an invaluable service, bailing out a number of floundering local renewal agencies and municipalities, while probably paying off some political debts incurred by the governor to obtain passage of the UDC legislation. Whatever the motivations—social, economic or political—the UDC as a developer-of-the-last-resort is filling a critical void in the urban renewal program. It is apparent that private developers are just not going to wade into the swampy waters of the cities without having someone else wade in first and cut a clear channel through the swamp. Civic associations and concerned community groups also need someone to hold their hands to lead them through the perplexing planning process.

With its seed money, selected financing, prestige and perserverance, the UDC provides a needed boost to cautious developers, do-gooders and municipalities, breathing some life into the state's urban renewal program; but the program is still weak and basically handicapped. As the UDC noted in one of its informational brochures, the total renewal effort in the state, since 1949, covers a little more than two and a half per cent of the estimated 100,000 acres in sub-standard condition.

The problem raised by the UDC's growing and deep involvement with urban renewal is that it will sap UDC's energies and finances and divert them from the task it is almost ideally set up for: the development of new towns and new projects outside the city. It has become apparent to the UDC through a study conducted for it by the Regional Plan Association, and various conferences, that the cities will never be able to rebuild themselves as they must as long as the constant growth of population presses upon them.

"I have put 15 years of my life into rebuilding two American cities, at least in part, and I know just as surely as I know the Old Howard is gone from Scollay Square that the cities—New Haven, Boston, New York—cannot solve this problem by themselves," said Ed Logue to a gathering of city-watchers. "It is time we understand that fact, controversial and difficult as it may be, and build our urban development policies around it."

A few weeks after his statement, the UDC announced plans for two new towns (September issue, page 32.) The first and most ambitious is the Amherst project, on the outskirts of Buffalo, where the State University has been planning a $650-million, 1,000-acre campus eventually to accommodate 50,000 students, faculty and administrative personnel, plus their families. It will be one of the largest university complexes in the world. The state has asked the UDC to integrate the proposed campus into a new town in the surrounding area that can support a population of 200,000 within 15 years and relate it economically, socially and esthetically to the neighboring and growing suburban communities. Beyond the physical plan, for which the British firm of Llewelyn-Davies, architects, has been hired, the UDC also will propose a method of financing and developing the new town. The approach of weaving planned government construction with private development into a new town fabric is unique to the United States, and it is noteworthy that the UDC is undertaking the weaver's job.

The second new community planned by the UDC lies 12 miles north of Syracuse in the town of Lysander. Here, the UDC has purchased, for $1.5 million, 2,100 acres of the old Baldwinsville Ordnance Depot, which was used for the manufacture of explosives in World War II and is now vacant except for the omnipresent abandoned automobiles. Preliminary plans developed by David A. Crane of Philadelphia call for an 800-acre industrial park and 4,600 units of mixed-type housing, with a town center and surrounding open and recreation space, to be constructed over a ten year period.

The tract and the plan are modest, but they do resolve some tricky political jurisdictional questions that could lead the way to similar developments elsewhere in the state. They also establish the precedent of the UDC competing with private developers for the purchase of tracts in the open market—and winning. But the proof of the pudding will come after the UDC completes its plans and tries to get private developers to buy them and build, hopefully within the next six months.

The present UDC new town efforts project a total population of 220,000—a start, but a long way to the state's expected population increase over the next 20 years of 4.7 million. Add to this figure an estimated 1.4 million New Yorkers now living in dilapidated or deteriorated buildings, and you end up with a total need of new housing in the state for more than 6 million people.

The UDC also has cast a cautious glance at suburbia, where Logue says he would like to see the corporation sponsor some small cluster developments of about 40 low-income units each. He has said that at this scale he was confident that the UDC could "create opportunities for low-income families to share in the good schools, the safe streets, the fresh air and open space other Americans like so well without unsettling or unbalancing the suburban communities."

This also was the recommendation of the Regional Plan Association in its study of housing opportunities for the UDC, but so far Logue has given no indication of where and when the UDC will attempt to put its toe into the stormy waters of suburbia. The UDC has only moved into areas to which it was invited, and there has been no such invitation from the suburbs. If anything, the UDC has been warned by politicians, publicly and privately, to stay out. With its appropriations running low and a state-wide election coming up, it is not expected that the UDC will make any major moves to loosen the so-called white noose of suburbia that is choking the cities and enraging civil rights groups.

1970 looms large in the future plans for the UDC. At this writing, Governor Rockefeller has indicated he will run again next year, principally to fulfill his commitment to solve the urban mess, which is interpreted by many as an act of faith in the UDC. As problems for the UDC grow, the governor can be expected to lend his critical support to Logue. If Rockefeller should decide not to run, or if he is defeated, the UDC will have the difficult task of establishing a new relationship with a new governor—at a cost no doubt of some powers and some pet projects. Logue's political acumen will be taxed.

The political situation in the coming year demands that the UDC get as many of its projects as possible off the planning boards and into the ground. This would justify Rockefeller's support and give him ammunition against the inevitable attacks on the UDC. If he should decide not to run, an active building program just might raise the UDC above politics—the ultimate goal—and win bipartisan support. It is easy to fight plans, but nearly impossible to fight buildings, especially buildings supplying jobs, housing and taxes.

The problems are there, but so is the potential. The lights in the UDC offices will be burning bright and late in 1970. The pressure to produce is on.

Dear Mr. President:

I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the Task Force which you selected to examine and make recommendations in respect to the Urban Renewal Program (Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended).

The members of the Task Force were privileged to be able to perform this service and hope that their conclusions will serve the purpose for which the Task Force was established.

Respectfully yours,

Miles L. Colean

OCTOBER 17, 1969

The White House

The President today announced the establishment of a Task Force on Urban Renewal. The task force, another in the series to make recommendations for 1970 and beyond, will be chaired by Miles L. Colean, a consulting economist in Washington, D.C. The task force will examine the current status of the federal urban renewal program, evaluate the results of its operations to date, and make recommendations concerning the future direction of the program.

The members of the Task Force on Urban Renewal are:

MILES L. COLEAN, Chairman
Consulting Economist
Washington, D.C.

SEYMOUR BASKIN
President
Urban Properties, Inc.
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

MARJORIE M. LAWSON
Attorney

Report of the President's Task Force on Urban Renewal

A Question of Priority

No issue confronting the nation places greater demands on resources, covers so wide a range of need and neglect, or calls more urgently for greater private and government effort than the problems of the cities. Because of the prevalence, magnitude, and urgency of urban problems and the apparent inability of states and cities to find solutions for them without outside aid, the plight of our cities is a matter of national concern and requres a national policy.

Numerous studies have analyzed our urban problems, pointing out the decay of central areas, the flight of families and business to the suburbs, the crowding of the disadvantaged and the hopeless in urban slums along with the increase in their numbers through rural-to-urban migration, the persistence of racial discrimination, the inadequacies of housing, the breakdown of municipal services, the spread of crime and public disorder, the chaos in the organization and financing of local government, the preemption of major revenue sources by the federal government and the complexity, confusion, and shortcomings of federal aid.

Members of the Task Force are familiar with these studies and see no need to repeat their investigations. The requirement now is not for more analysis but for a national focus on the problems, and a drastic revision in the rating of national priorities. At the present, despite an increase in attention to urban problems by federal and local governments and by the public generally, their rating remains a low one, as they yield to the exigencies of national defense, the lure of spectacular and prestigious projects, and the maintenance of long-standing and frequently obsolete programs. Rich as it is, the country cannot do all things—even all desirable things—at once. If the cities and its people are to receive the aid that their condition demands, the "give" in the allocation of resources will have to come from other areas.

Limitations of Urban Renewal

The Federal-local government program of land acquisition, replanning, demolition or rehabilitation, and re-sale—defined in law as "Urban Renewal"—is one instrument for meeting urban problems, but it is only one of the instruments. It cannot be expected to cure all the ills of the cities, of which the most serious are poverty and racial discrimination. In fact, unless carefully planned and administered, the urban renewal program inadvertently may aggravate these other problems:

> While Urban Renewal can eliminate slums at a project site, it may, in the absence of other aids, lead to the intensification of slum conditions and housing shortages in other locations.
> Urban Renewal can provide sites for housing of any price class, but it cannot produce housing for low and moderate income families unless it is combined with programs for aiding low cost housing such as those included in recent housing bills. On the contrary, by wholesale demolition, it has tended to contribute to the shortage of housing, particularly for families of low income.
> Urban Renewal cannot end racial discrimination, and indeed, the demolition incidental to a change in land use may lead to an intensification of racial concentration and unrest.
> Urban Renewal may ultimately increase job opportunities, but the demolition entailed in carrying out the plan may, by destroying local sources of employment, temporarily add to the difficulty of relieving poverty.

In addition, Urban Renewal is limited by the resistance of suburbs to the introduction of families of different race and lower income than the norm of the local community. Its effectiveness has also been blunted by vague and conflicting objectives and by complexity in program and administration within the Department of Housing and Urban Development. This problem has been magnified by the confused and complicated relationships among federal agencies concerned with some aspect of urban conditions and between the federal agencies and the state and local governments with which they must deal.

Nevertheless, if properly administered and supported with related programs for reducing poverty and building low cost housing, Urban Renewal can be a vital tool for alleviating slum conditions and tensions and for stimulating the physical and economic revitalization of the cities, which serve as the hub and crossroads of our metropolitan areas.[1] The need for a means to facilitate desirable changes in land use and to improve the physical condition of the cities will continue to exist even in the presence of more direct and effective measures for alleviating the critical problems of poverty and race.

Objectives of Urban Renewal

While few legislative enactments have a single, well-defined objective, few measures have as many vaguely stated and often incompatible objectives as does the statute covering Urban Renewal. Put together piece by piece and from year to year since 1949, the Urban Renewal program has followed no clearly defined aim. The Task Force believes that the present vague and conflicting objectives of the Urban Renewal program in themselves pose a critical problem. Major effort should be devoted to the establishment of clear and definite objectives that would serve as a basis for evaluating proposed applications and for establishing priorities for the allocation of available funds to those projects that best promote national policies.

Before stating specific recommendations for the future of urban renewal, the Task Force presents the following in an effort to clarify objectives and to provide the basis for decision in carrying out a program of aid for land assembly and reuse. The order in which these objectives are listed does not necessarily reflect their relative importance.

OBJECTIVE I—To enhance the efficiency of land use. Since Urban Renewal is an instrument for planning, assembling, and redistributing underused and misused urban land, a primary objective is to achieve desirable land uses not otherwise attainable, whether such uses be housing or other types of public or private improvements. While the free enterprise system is capable of serving many of these needs without aid, special circumstances will warrant exercising the power of eminent domain for land assembly and may also justify a writedown of land costs, including the costs of relocating streets and utilities and of providing ancillary public facilities. Depending on the individual case, these special circumstances may include any of the following conditions:[2]

> Where the redevelopment plan requires major changes in the layout of streets and public utilities,
> Where the magnitude of costs of planning, land assembly, and redevelopment required for the indicated public benefit may be so great that private financial syndicates of sufficient size to carry them out cannot be formed.

[2] See page 11 for comments of Messrs. Muth and Tolley.

Where, because individual owners withhold parcels essential to the redevelopment of a specified project area, it may be impossible through voluntary transactions to complete the land assembly,

Where the prospective use is for a purpose incapable of sustaining a full market value for the land, such as the construction or rehabilitation of low cost housing or the expansion of a university or similar facility, or

Where it is necessary to provide an incentive to developers to participate in a high-risk situation in order to carry out the purposes of the renewal plan.

OBJECTIVE II—To improve the fiscal and economic condition of the community. A second important objective is to produce (a) a net improvement in the financial condition of the local government through an enlargement of its tax base or through savings in the cost of municipal services within the designated area, or (b) a net increase in personal or business income in the community as a whole (without subtracting from the fiscal or economic base of other communities). The Task Force considers such benefits to be in the national interest and to embody an acceptable objective for federal support of Urban Renewal.

OBJECTIVE III—To decrease the threat of balkanization and polarization of American society. There is perhaps no greater danger to the future of our democracy than the possibility that the cities as we have known them will be destroyed as the affluent and the white concentrate more and more in the suburbs, and the central cities are converted into reservations for the black and the poor. The Task Force feels strongly that Urban Renewal should be used to help in exorcising the spectre of economic and ethnic apartheid. Urban Renewal may contribute to a greater dispersion and inter-mixing of ethnic and income groups, both by assembling land in the suburbs for dispersed low income housing and by assembling land in central city locations attractive to persons of a wide variety of backgrounds. This objective provides a major reason for federal support of Urban Renewal. Urban Renewal, however, should result in true integration, not merely in separate enclaves of income and racial groups with little personal, social, or economic interaction as it has done all too often in the past.

These objectives are definite. If the contributions of Urban Renewal to them were made the basis for approval of federal expenditures, the federal dollar might be spent more effectively in selecting among competing projects. The knowledge that these objectives were being used as a basis of selection should greatly influence the types of urban renewal activities proposed by localities for funding.[3]

Specific Recommendations for the Urban Renewal Program

Since the assignment of the Task Force was to review and to make recommendations with respect to the involvement of the federal government in Urban Renewal and since other Task Forces are considering related programs, its recommendations are confined to this sphere of federal government action and to influences bearing directly upon it. This does not signify a lack of awareness of the contributions to urban improvement that are to be made by other federal programs or by state and local governments and private initiative. Rather it assumes the necessity for such contributions and considers federally sponsored Urban Renewal primarily as a means for inducing the expansion of state and local effort and for encouraging and facilitating the greater participation of private industry and finance.

RECOMMENDATION I. The Task Force recommends that the administration seek the revision of the present Urban Renewal legislation to incorporate the objectives outlined above, in order to eliminate present confusion in objectives, simplify administration, and insure that the renewal program serves national as opposed to purely local purposes.

In keeping with the need for flexibility in land use, Urban Renewal should not be restricted as to type of land acquired or purpose for which the re-sold land will be used. It should be able to encompass residential, commercial, industrial, and public uses as deemed necessary and appropriate by officially approved local plans. The Task Force deplores the trend toward restricting Urban Renewal to the provision of sites for housing families of low and moderate income. Such restriction not only prevents an orderly and rational redevelopment of urban land but also tends to perpetuate and intensify racial segregation.

RECOMMENDATION II. Where the indicated reuse of land is for income-producing property with present or potential appeal to the private market, the Task Force recommends that, as an alternative to outright sale (where a write-down of land cost is involved), greater consideration be given to the leasing of land for a fixed period. This arrangement should provide for recovery of the initial aid through participation in gross rental income of the new development or, in case of sale during or at the end of the lease, through a proportionate federal-local sharing in any increase in land value produced by the improvements.

RECOMMENDATION III. The Task Force recommends that what may be called the time or the sequence factor in urban renewal be made a matter of both policy and performance. All programs do not have to be instituted at once, nor do large areas of land always have to be cleared at once. Moreover, no initial plan need be considered the ultimate for all time. Flexibility and fluidity have been the principles on which our cities have developed. In a more orderly and farseeing manner, flexibility and fluidity should be provided for in plans for urban redevelopment. Moreover, a sequential approach permits doing first things first as well as utilizing temporary and partial methods of urban improvement. To these ends, the Task Force recommends inclusion in Urban Renewal of the following important programs:

a. Primary actions should include the improvement and maintenance of municipal services—policing, fire protection, garbage and trash collection, street maintenance and lighting, sanitation and health services, and counseling in living under urban conditions. Adequate municipal housekeeping, which embraces these actions is vital to the encouragement of good private housekeeping, the maintenance of property, the encouragement of new investment, and the enjoyment of urban life.

b. Next in consideration should be the maintenance and rehabilitation of existing private and public structures in an Urban Renewal area even where replacement may ultimately be called for. A well-maintained area is more likely to invite new investment, and the possible resulting increase in the cost of acquisition may well be made up by the lessened risk of operating in a cleaner and more orderly area.

c. Maximum use should be made of the Neighborhood Development Program, incorporated into the 1968 legislation. This program is an important move in the direction of promoting reconstruction without totally disrupting existing neighborhoods. However, the Neighborhood Development Program should itself be modified to avoid the tendency, which it shares with the regular urban renewal program, to result in the neglect of existing property within the designated renewal area while the area awaits the completion of project planning and execution. Consideration should be given to greater flexibility in the limits of the area, scope of the project, and assurance both of maintenance of municipal services during the redevelopment period and of compensation for rehabilitation costs incurred during the interim period in the event of ultimate taking.

Recommendation IV. The concept of the "Workable Program," (under which a city is required to undertake agreed upon improvements in municipal ordinances and services as a prerequisite to obtaining federal aid for land acquisition and low cost housing) which was introduced into the Housing Act of 1954 has been perverted by communities that, in order to exclude the construction of federally aided housing, have refused to establish a program that meets the requirements. Yet it is obvious that some means must be found to encourage construction of additional housing for families of low income in suburban areas if excessive inner-city concentration is to be diminished and Urban Renewal successfully employed.

Congress has now eliminated the Workable Program requirement from all the HUD housing programs (except the rent supplement program in some instances), so that it now applies basically only to the urban renewal program. The Task Force believes the Workable Program has outlived its initial intent and usefulness and should be dropped from the statute.

The Task Force strongly believes, however, that greater efforts should be made to break the suburban barrier around the central cities so that people of all income levels can find housing within their means at a reasonable distance from their places of work. To this end, the Task Force urges that federal aids of all sorts be withheld from communities unless they undertake a program to expand the supply of low and moderate income housing within their boundaries—another way of saying that the central feature of the Workable Program should be made a requirement for all federal aid programs.

In addition, the Task Force recommends that additional legislation be requested to provide special federal aid to help suburban communities meet the increased costs of education, public health, transportation, and other municipal services that result directly from expanding the supply of low and moderate income housing in the community.

RECOMMENDATION V. The Task Force recommends a restructuring of the present system of grants for Urban Renewal. Non-cash contributions by a community in lieu of cash payment of its share of the costs of Urban Renewal appear to have been difficult to assess and to have aggravated complexity and delay in the initiation and settlement of projects. The Task Force, therefore, urges consideration of changes in the grant procedure that would substitute a local payment all in cash for the present non-cash contribution, at a lower ratio to the federal participation than embodied in the present formula.[4]

[4] See page 12 for recommendations of Messrs. Muth and Tolley for further changes in system of federal support.

RECOMMENDATION VI. As an initial step in the avoidance of delay and misunderstanding, the Task Force urges a thorough reconsideration of the present procedures for examination and review of project applications on the basis of the program objectives recommended earlier in the report. The time available to the Task Force has not permitted adequate consideration of suggestions for revised procedures for initial review and determination of the desirability and feasibility of projects. An appendix hereto, however, contains a proposal advanced by two of its members on their own behalf.

Recommendations Covering Other Matters Closely Related to the Urban Renewal Program

The Urban Renewal program as now constituted is one of many federal aids available for the improvement of urban communities. Depending upon circumstances, it may be vital to achieving the desired improvements or it may be of relatively lesser importance in relation to other actions needed to achieve the goal. The potential achievement of urban renewal and its successful utilization in contributing to the broad purpose of improving the economy and livability of cities therefore require a consideration of its relation to and frequent dependence upon other public actions. The following recommendations are concerned with these issues:

RECOMMENDATION VII. Urban problems are largely the result of the poverty of many urban dwellers. The number of people in this category has greatly increased since World War I by migration from rural areas. Slum housing exists almost wholly because of the low incomes of its occupants who thus are limited severely in the amounts they can spend for housing. The fiscal crisis of central city governments results primarily from the decreasing tax revenues and increasing demands for local governmental services associated with growing numbers of lower income residents. If the cities were relieved of the burden of poverty, they would be better able to provide necessary services from their own fiscal resources. Increased incomes would give lower income families the means for better satisfying their individual needs, in particular for acquiring better housing on the private market. The Task Force therefore urges the enactment of income maintenance and job training programs to increase the incomes of lower income families.

RECOMMENDATION VIII. The potential scope of the federal participation in the solution of the urban problem is of such magnitude and diversity that control and responsibility for performance must be decentralized if administrative chaos is to be avoided. The Task Force recommends that maximum freedom be given to state and local governments to plan and carry out programs agreed upon (including in the case of Urban Renewal the elimination of prior approval of specific land sales). The institution of a "proclaimer" process by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (under which performance is certified by the local governing body, subject to a form of post-audit by the Department and withdrawal of future support in case of miscertification), is commended, and the Task Force urges its application to all situations where federal aid is offered to states and cities. In this connection special concern must be shown for compliance with federal standards on nondiscrimination.

Consideration should also be given to means for the quick adjudication by special arbitration panels of differences between the federal and local jurisdictions or between the local government and affected program participants.

RECOMMENDATION IX. The Task Force recommends that the federal government's involvement in urban problems be coordinated throughout the whole range of federal aids: relief, education, air and water cleansing, sewer and water facilities, highways, other public works, and urban renewal. In furtherance of this approach, the Task Force recommends the creation in the Executive Office of the President of a means for giving direction to the total effort and for assuring the cooperation of agencies and the coordination of activities. The Council of Urban Affairs conceivably could serve this purpose. In the pursuance of this objective, relationships between the federal government and the governments of states and municipalities should be clarified and regularized. In particular, uniform requirements, applicable to all federal programs, should be instituted for compensating displaced families and small businesses, taking into consideration the desirability of easing the hard principles of property appraisal so as to avoid individual hardship.

Demolition of existing structures or the dislocation of people and small businesses affected by any federally aided operation, or by any operation required as a prerequisite to federal aid, should not proceed except where the requirements for relocation have been met.

RECOMMENDATION X. The Task Force has already indicated the need for restructuring the Urban Renewal statute as a means for clarifying objectives, simplifying administration, and increasing the effectiveness of operation. But the need is broader than this.

The entire federal apparatus calls for review and evaluation. The Hoover Commissions were concerned with administrative efficiency. What now is needed is a review of administrative substance. As is true of Urban Renewal, federal programs characteristically have grown by accretion from year to year as some real or fancied emergency has brought forth new legislative demands. Many of these programs still reflect attitudes of the 1930s or, to be more current, the early years following World War II. No general evaluation, no investigation of costs and benefits, has been made. Yet, in a time of strained resources, nothing is more imperative.

Therefore, the Task Force urges that, either within the Bureau of the Budget or by a Presidential Commission, the substance of the federal establishment be reviewed to the end of discarding obsolete operations, reducing duplication among programs, and relating activities to the needs of the present and the future rather than clinging to those of the past.

Recommendation XI. The thorough review of all the activities of the federal government called for above should make easier the task of reconsidering the scale of priorities among optional operations and determining those for which continuance, expansion, diminution, or elimination may be justified. The Task Force considers this a matter of great urgency, for, while it would recommend a much higher rating to urban improvement than now is obviously the case, and would also recommend lesser status for a number of other activities of currently high rating, it recognizes that, in the absence of adequate means for evaluation, it is in no position to make final judgment.

Consequently, the Task Force is also in no position to recommend specific allocation of funds for Urban Renewal for the coming fiscal year. The amounts which the Task Force understands have been approved by the Bureau of the Budget would appear to be minimal, for the potential of expenditures for urban aid seems inexhaustible. Solving the problem of priorities therefore involves the constraint of legislative promises to the availability of total resources. Whatever proves to be the appropriate reallocation of priorities within total available resources, the Task Force urges that, so far as possible, continuity be assured, so that plans may be made in the confidence that operations not be subject to repeated interruptions in progress. Allocation should be made for a minimum of two fiscal years.

Comments of Individual Members Regarding Body of Report

1. Messrs. Muth and Tolley dissent as follows:

We believe the report gives an overly optimistic impression of the contribution of urban renewal to mitigating urban problems. We would emphasize more strongly than does the Report the need for measures directly attacking poverty, relative to programs aimed at physical restructuring of cities. In our view higher priority should be given to two promising approaches already endorsed by the Administration. These are income maintenance and federal revenue sharing. Revenue sharing is a direct means for meeting the fiscal crises of cities and enabling them better to provide local government services. Income maintenance strikes directly at the heart of the poverty problem rather than nibbling at its edges as many other programs have attempted to do.

(As Chairman of the Task Force, I find the above to be more in the nature of emphasis than dissent. The Report repeatedly stresses the grim and leading part that poverty plays in the plight of the cities and strongly endorses the principle of income support. Time did not permit thorough study of the revenue sharing proposal, but it was recognized that in any case, it could not at once become a full substitute for specific aid programs. M.L.C.)

2. Messrs. Muth and Tolley express the following view regarding these special circumstances:

We agree that the second and third circumstances (magnitude of costs and withholding of parcels) constitute bona fide reasons for public action, and do not object to listing the first circumstance (change in layout of streets and utilities) although this is a special case of the second or third circumstances.

The fourth circumstance (land use not able to sustain a full market value) does not belong in the list in our opinion. It appears to us to refer to land uses which detract from, rather than enhance, land use efficiency. In our opinion public action to foster these purposes is justified only if it can be shown that the gain in terms of other objectives (such as Objectives II and III) is worth the sacrifice in land use efficiency.

The fifth circumstance (inducing participation in high risk situation) likewise appears to us not to belong in the list, as it refers to an interference with land use efficiency and would have to be shown to be justified under objectives other than land use efficiency.

3. Messrs. Muth and Tolley wish to add the following to the discussion of the objectives of urban renewal:

In stating the objectives of urban renewal, a clear distinction should be made between the circumstances when the use of eminent domain is warranted and when the payment of federal subsidy is warranted. With regard to land use efficiency, either the high costs of renewal or the hold-out for prices in excess of the value of land in alternative uses may justify land assembly by local governments using powers of eminent domain. They do not justify government subsidy or land write-down. If the obstacles just noted alone are responsible for redevelopment not being undertaken privately, the resale value of the redeveloped renewal site would exceed the costs incurred in planning, acquisition and redevelopment. External effects on property values outside the renewal area proper may justify local but not federal subsidy, since these benefits accrue wholly to local property owners or to other local residents. Local improvements in the renewal area are no different in principle than other local improvements. They provide no special justification for federal support, especially if federal support to local governments is being provided through revenue sharing and/or loan programs for the support of local public facilities. We believe, instead, that federal support should be given urban renewal projects only to the extent they provide benefits outside the boundaries of the local government undertaking the project or contribute to objectives of renewal other than land-use efficiency.

4. Messrs. Muth and Tolley urge further changes in the system of federal support for urban renewal projects:

Federal support of urban renewal should, in our opinion, be based upon the extent to which these projects contribute to the attainment of national objectives, as distinct from the purely local objective of land-use efficiency. If, for example, a project increases the tax receipts of the city in which it is located, a federal contribution equal to the cost to the federal government of providing an equal increase in funds through, say, revenue sharing would be credited to the project. Similarly, if the project achieves an increase in the mixing of income and ethnic groups, a credit would be made based upon the extent of the increase. The federal contribution made to the urban renewal project would then be the sum of all such credits rather than a predetermined fraction of the net project cost.

Appendix

Additional Views of George S. Tolley and Richard F. Muth

To qualify for federal support, a proposal should be accompanied by an impact study of the urban renewal activity, to be made public when the project is approved. Employment and earnings effects, fiscal effects, effects on the dispersion of income and ethnic groups, and other project effects should be estimated, not just in the renewal area but wherever they occur. The estimated benefits should be based on projections of relevant factors within and outside the renewal area both with and without the proposed urban renewal project. The benefits from the increased earnings and from the increase in tax base should be estimated on a net national basis.

A manual should be prepared giving practicable directions to localities for making the required estimates and to indicating how, in quantitative terms, to estimate the effects of the renewal project. Admittedly, many of these estimates may be difficult to make. Working part-time under a near-term deadline, it is impossible to spell out the details of making them. Still, great progress has been made in recent years in measuring the potential benefits of water resource and regional development programs, and this experience can serve as a guide to formulating methods of evaluating urban renewal projects.

a. For meeting the objective of efficiency of urban land use, use of profitability criteria to which private developers would respond should be adequate for most major land use purposes. These may involve importantly changes in land value at and near the site of activities. Methods for making approximate estimates of land value effects are readily at hand. Certain effects are more difficult to evaluate because, though spread over a number of people, they do not have pronounced effects on land values. These may include effects on urban recreation, environmental pollution, and aesthetics, including elimination of eye-sore blight. The numbers to be used in valuing these effects should be presented in the manual so that all localities will follow the same standards. The great progress made in recent years in valuing recreation benefits indicates that meaningful quantification of these more elusive effects is possible. Methods for arriving at numerical valuation should be specified at the outset, and these methods should be refined over the years.

b. The benefits from increased earnings of people should be estimated as net national increases in earnings. It is axiomatic and well known that much if not most of the increase in employment in the city as a result of urban renewal is offset by decreases in the rest of the economy. The basic reason is that, rather than remain unemployed, most people will move to the place where they can get a job. Again, the evaluation of federal expenditures aimed at Appalachia and other depressed areas has produced reliable quantitative estimates of net national employment effects resulting from expenditure in a particular area. These methods should be incorporated directly into the procedures for evaluating urban renewal.

c. The benefits from increased tax base should likewise be estimated on a net national basis. Much of the increase in local tax base due to urban renewal will be offset in the nation at large by decreases in tax base of other localities. If the decreases occur in communities in which the level of public services is more adequate, there may still be significant net national gain in the level of public services provided. The manual should indicate, first, how to estimate the net effects on public services, taking account of the levels of public services existing in areas where services are increased and decreased. Second, the manual should indicate whether the increases and decreases in public services can be given dollar weights to make them comparable with the benefits from more efficient land use and from increases in earnings of people. In the short time required to secure a near-term redirection of the urban renewal program, it may not be feasible to develop measures of benefits of public services in these comparable terms. This can be done with the aid of economic analysis over a longer period of time.

d. Quantitative measures can easily be devised of the "degree of mixing" of groups within community areas by ethnicity and income levels. Effects of urban renewal in these measures will indicate the contribution of a proposed activity to a more desirable interspersion of groups. It will be extremely difficult to develop objective dollar measures of how much benefits—in terms, say, of efficient land use—should be valued relative to attaining a given degree of more desirable interspersion of people. The President's office, speaking for the nation as a whole, could indicate what weighting, or trade-off, is appropriate between interspersion and other benefits.

e. Similar evaluation procedures would be applied to other objectives affected by urban renewal.

The development of methods for evaluating urban renewal projects requires the knowledge and skills of technically trained economists, real estate specialists, systems analysts, and others. The Department of Housing and Urban Development should establish an office of economic analysis and evaluation and staff it with the appropriate professional personnel to carry out these responsibilities. This office could also evaluate the results of other HUD programs and carry out the applied research needed to refine these evaluations. Relatively small expenditures for research and project evaluation could greatly enhance the effectiveness of the much larger sums spent on operating programs.

REBUILDING THE CITIES

by Robert C. Wood

The great boom in urban population has focused attention on the conditions of urban life in America.

The once small town and rural American community has become large and urban. Only 25 years ago there were 68 million Americans living in urban areas. Today there are 135 million. By the year 2000, the population in urban areas will have increased to an estimated 260 million, 80 percent of the total population, in contrast with today's 70 percent and the 52 percent of the 1940s.

ROBERT C. WOOD is Under Secretary of the new Department of Housing and Urban Development. He formerly headed the Department of Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He has authored numerous studies on the problems of metropolitan areas.

These figures on America's urbanization have been so often repeated they have begun to sound trite. But they are important to stress. They underline the major domestic concern of our time: the need to make cities livable for ourselves and future generations of Americans.

Though the increased size and scale of the cities have meant greater efficiency in the production, distribution and consumption of goods and services, the continuing surge of people has multiplied the problems of urban growth and decay. Cities already hard-pressed to deal with decayed and blighted areas face new—sometimes overwhelming—pressures for housing, schools, transportation and the public facilities vital to community life.

As President Johnson noted in his historic Message

Top: Ingenuity makes rehabilitation of some housing practicable. Here a pre-assembled kitchen-bathroom core unit is hoisted through a hole cut in roof of a New York building.

Bottom: This low-income public housing area in Washington, D.C. shows a pleasant setting is possible in a large city.

on the Cities, we shall have to build in the remainder of this century an inventory of shelters, of stores, of service facilities equal to all that we have built since the first colonists arrived on our shores. We will need, for example, more than 2 million new homes a year, schools for 10 million additional children, transportation facilities for the daily movement of 200 million people.

Not only is urban growth rapid and expansive, it is also uneven and unequal. Within the metropolitan regions, disparities grow between central city and suburbs in income, in social composition and in land use.

Thus, while an entire metropolitan area may seem healthy, there are large pockets where:

—Over 40 percent of the families are denied good housing. (In the nation as a whole, there are still more than 8 million homes which are rundown or deteriorating.)

—As high as 20 percent of workers lack jobs.

—Over 35 percent of the families have incomes at or below a poverty level.

—And an alarmingly disproportionate number of the disadvantaged are non-white.

These are the problems of the neglected neighborhoods—the blighted and slum areas whose physical decay helps breed the social decay that is reflected in such things as rising crime rates, school dropouts and disorder in the streets.

Public interest and attention to these needs and demands is increasing. The problems of the cities are being placed high on the national agenda and the federal response has been vigorous.

In 1965, Congress created the Department of Housing and Urban Development to provide a focal point for thought and innovation about the problems of the cities. Through the Department, we can expect a strengthening of the partnership between city, state and federal government; and the development of new partnerships in problem-solving between government and universities, private business, voluntary and professional organizations.

In urban affairs, no partnership is more important than that with labor. Cities traditionally have been the home of the nation's labor force as well as the site of its employment. If cities are to be reborn and revitalized, labor must be involved and committed from the very beginning.

A variety of new programs were enacted in the last few years to help cities to meet problems of both growth and decay—programs designed not merely in terms of physical necessities, but fashioned in the context of human needs.

These include measures to provide open space as well as buildings; to relocate families displaced by renewal and highways; to assist mass transportation systems; to build basic public facilities.

A program of rent supplements brings private enterprise into the field of providing good housing for those of low income. Another program aids development of neighborhood facilities in low-income areas.

Enacted in 1966, the newest urban legislation makes possible the Model Cities program, the Metropolitan Development program and the New Communities program.

The central thrust of the Model Cities program is to make livable again entire neighborhoods in the older cities and to reclaim the opportunity for residential urban life. It provides quite simply that communities wishing to participate and willing to meet some performance standards create a comprehensive plan, including programs for both physical and social development—the improvement of health and education as well as the construction and rehabilitation of houses and community facilities.

The federal government responds by making available traditional types of aid to fit the components of the comprehensive plan and by giving the community a supplemental grant to use at its own discretion to fill in the chinks. This program is intended to provide incentives for a community to examine deeply its needs and to pull together a total, coordinated response. The program is experimental in nature—a large enough experiment, we hope, with sufficient concentration of money and effort to produce a "critical mass" for real change, but without any effort to move into every situation at once.

The Metropolitan Development program similarly provides supplemental grants for programs made in accordance with sound, coordinated metropolitan planning.

In both cases, we are trying to create a situation in which local needs and capabilities are dynamically related to the national thrust toward improving the quality of urban life and toward making orderly and coherent the massive forces of metropolitan growth.

Title X of the new legislation includes for the first time the so-called New Communities program. This provides that where private enterprise wishes to go forward in entirely new designs of communities, with new technology, with new architecture, with new configurations of population, the federal government will respond by making mortgage funds available to help them "get over the hump" of that critical shortage between the time when their plans are dreams in the eyes of their architects and when they become reality. In this way, it is hoped, green places will not get squeezed, parks abandoned and varied-income housing lost because of a shortage of funds.

It is important to realize that the Model Cities program is a "demonstration" program. It is designed to help cities of all sizes analyze and experiment with new approaches to the solution of the long-standing problems generated by slums and their corrosive effect upon human life. It is not a program of direct application to every city and every blighted area. Rather, through the solutions developed by the cities approved for Model Cities aid, we hope that other cities may be able to find solutions to their problems.

For the current fiscal year, Congress has appropriated $11 million for planning purposes; another $12 million has been authorized for planning for the next fiscal year and a total of $900 million has been authorized for carrying out the Model Cities program during the next two fiscal years.

How will the financing work in actual practice?

Let us take a hypothetical city and assume that it

The good community means modern libraries for children, a place for older people and open areas in which to sit and relax.

Message on the Cities

It was in this important message to the Congress that President Johnson urged creation of the new Department of Housing and Urban Development and a wide range of programs to help revitalize the cities. These are excerpts.

Throughout man's history, the city has been at the center of civilization. It is at the center of our own society.

Over 70 percent of our population, 135 million Americans, live in urban areas. A half century from now 320 million of our 400 million Americans will live in such areas. And our largest cities will receive the greatest impact of growth.

Numbers alone do not make this an urban nation. Finance and culture, commerce and government make their home in the city and draw their vitality from it. Within the borders of our urban centers can be found the most impressive achievements of man's skill and the highest expressions of man's spirit, as well as the worst examples of degradation and cruelty and misery to be found in modern America.

. . . The modern city can be the most ruthless enemy of the good life, or it can be its servant. The choice is up to this generation of Americans.

. . . Let us be clear about the core of this problem. The problem is people and the quality of the lives they lead. We want to build not just housing units, but neighborhoods; not just to construct schools, but to educate children; not just to raise income but to create beauty and end the poisoning of our environment. We must extend the range of choices available to all our people so that all, and not just the fortunate, can have access to decent homes and schools, to recreation and to culture. We must work to overcome the forces which divide our people and erode the vitality which comes from the partnership of those with diverse incomes and interests and backgrounds.

The problems of the city are problems of housing and education. They involve increasing employment and ending poverty. They call for beauty and nature, recreation and an end to racial discrimination. They are, in large measure, the problems of American society itself. They call for a generosity of vision, a breadth of approach, a magnitude of effort which we have not yet brought to bear on the American city.

. . . The interests and needs of many of the communities which make up the modern city often seem to be in conflict. But they all have an overriding interest in improving the quality of life of their people. And they have an overriding interest in enriching the quality of American civilization.

proposes in its demonstration program a range of federally-assisted programs that involve $20 million in non-federal contributions. These might include some neighborhood parks, tot lots and green areas, an urban renewal project, a health services program, a neighborhood center, an adult education program, a manpower and job training program—whatever the city thinks is necessary to accomplish a significant improvement in the neighborhood and the quality of the lives of its people.

In the hypothetical case, the $20 million local share of these programs will generate, under the financing formulas of the Model Cities program, supplemental funds of 80 percent of this amount or $16 million. The great new thrust of this program lies in the fact that these supplemental funds do not have to be earmarked for any one specific project or activity. They may be used for any project or activity included as part of the demonstration program. A city may, for example, want to use this money for improved garbage collection, accelerated manpower-job training programs or new experiments in housing rehabilitation and home ownership among lower income families.

In this hypothetical case, the federal share of the total program might, if we take a two-to-one ratio such as the one in urban renewal and neighborhood centers, come to $40 million. Add that to the $20 million of local contributions and the $16 million in the 80 percent supplemental funds from the Model Cities program and you have a total of $76 million. Here is the multiplier effect of the Model Cities program at work.

But the financing is only a means to an end—improvement in the lives of people, whether it relates to housing, health, employment, education or all of these. Thus we will be greatly concerned with involvement—involvement of private and public agencies and officials and involvement of the residents of the areas. Neighborhood residents must be given the opportunity to participate in the rebuilding of their areas. For example, they should be able to benefit from any jobs that arise from rehabilitation of new residential or non-residential construction in the neighborhood. We expect that the kinds of housing and other facilities contemplated for the neighborhood will be thoroughly discussed with the residents and that decisions will be made on the basis of their expressed desires and needs.

Involvement begins with planning. Unless residents are involved in the planning right from the beginning, the program of improvements for the neighborhood will lose much of its significance for the people whom the program has been designed to benefit.

We are also keenly concerned with innovation, new ways of accomplishing improvement in the physical, social and economic lives of people living in Model Cities neighborhoods.

Each city with such a program should become a laboratory. The old ways have not sufficed and will not suffice in the future. Cities must examine and

A DEVELOPING COMMUNITY NEEDS URBAN RENEWAL

(Excerpted from an article in The Clarion Herald with permission.)

The Rev. Eugene McManus, S.S.J., author of this article, is director of the Archdiocesan Commission on Housing and Community Life. He was one of the participants in a public symposium on urban renewal on Friday, April 21, sponsored by fifteen civic, religious, labor, neighborhood, and social welfare organizations.

At the present time, Louisiana is the only state in the union in which urban renewal is outlawed by the state legislature. Throughout the state, local communities which would like to take advantage of urban renewal programs are prevented from doing so by this statewide restriction.

In the forthcoming session of the state legislature, legislation will be introduced which would permit New Orleans and some other cities to exercise local freedom of choice in adopting urban renewal. Already the wheels of opposition are beginning to spin. Special interest groups and their spokesmen are making intemperate assertions concerning the evils of urban renewal.

If the legislature does permit local freedom of choice, the people of New Orleans will be called upon to accept or reject urban renewal in a city-wide referendum. Since many people do not really know what urban renewal is, it may be well to examine urban renewal, its moral implications, and what it means to New Orleans in view of our local needs.

WHAT IS URBAN RENEWAL?

Basically it can be described as a local community effort, with considerable help from the federal government, to eliminate existing slums, to correct those factors which cause urban decay, and to introduce a program of long range community planning.

The three main features of urban renewal are:

1. The elimination of slums through neighborhood conservation and the enforcement of housing codes.

2. Rehabilitation of structures and of neighborhoods which can be saved.

3. Redevelopment of areas and clearance of structures which are so badly deteriorated that they cannot be brought up to the standards of decent living conditions.

Congress has enacted, beginning with the Housing Act of 1949, a series of provisions which include grants, loans, mortgage insurance, and technical assistance.

With the help of these tools local government has access to the tremendous resources of the federal government in the staggering task of fighting the rapid and otherwise hopeless decay of our cities. The program is administered by a local public agency which, depending on state law, may be a separate public agency, a local housing authority, or a department of city government. The main concern of Congress is that the program be local --- in conception, planning, and execution.

HOW IS URBAN RENEWAL FINANCED?

In a city the size of New Orleans, the federal government pays for two-thirds of the total cost. The other one third is a contribution of the local community. It can be made in cash or in non-cash grants-in aid such as donations of land, work, or public facilities either by local government or by local institutions.

The controversy over urban renewal focuses around the government's power of eminent domain. It must be understood that the government already has the right to expropriate property and dedicate it to public use such as highways, playgrounds, schools, and even public housing projects. The present "restriction" in Louisiana legislation is against expropriation as it is employed in urban renewal programs.

An urban renewal project may involve the acquisition of private property in order to clear a decayed area and rededicate it to more constructive uses. The land is acquired at a fair price and resold for redevelopment in accordance with the renewal plan.

An unwarranted amount of confusion seems to be developing locally concerning the moral right of government to use its power of eminent domain in this fashion.

At the heart of the problem is the question of common good. The right of an individual to own and use his property is not unlimited. As John XXIII said: "Since men are social by nature, they must live together and consult each other's interests. That men should recognize and perform their respective rights and duties is imperative to a well ordered society."

The restrictions which the common good place upon individual rights are described frequently by St. Thomas Aquinas in his Summa Theologiae.

For example: "The good of the individual is subordinate to the good of the many" (11, 11, 11 ad 3).

"The common good is to be preferred to the private good" (11, 11, 32, 6).

In his recent (March 28 encyclical, "Development of Peoples," Pope Paul VI addressed himself to this very problem:
"... private property does not constitute for anyone an absolute and unconditioned right. No one is justified in keeping for his exclusive use what he does not need, when others lack necessities. In a word, 'according to the traditional doctrine as found in the Fathers of the Church and the great theologians, the right to property must never be exercised to the detriment of the common good.' If there should arise a conflict 'between acquired private rights and primary community exigencies,' it is the responsibility of public authorities 'to look for a solution with the active participation of individuals and social groups'."

The problem then, revolves around the question of whether the provisions of urban renewal are beneficial to the common good. If they are, the government clearly has the right to use its power in enacting it.

It is our contention that the program of urban renewal not only is beneficial to the common good, it is an absolute necessity if our city is to be saved from decay and if the poor are to be rescued from the exploitation of the slums.

Our cities are a product of a laissez-faire philosophy of rugged individualism in capitalistic enterpries. They are a glaring example of social Darwinism which, completely blind to the Christian concept of social responsibility, advocated an unrestricted economic competition and the "survival of the fittest."

As a result of minimal government intervention, cities became "happenings." Congestion, lack of code enforcement, and overcrowding produced slums in which the poor fought for sunlight and sanitation. These problems were compounded for minority groups who, unable to rent or purchase homes in the open market, began to pile up in ghettos where a high density of low fulfillment began to breed despair, frustration, and anti-social behavior.

NEW ORLEANS is no exception. It has been stated many times over that we possibly have the worst housing in the country, that 3 out of every 10 citizens in our city live in substandard housing, that 23,500 residential units have no hot water, that 18,000 have no private flush toilets --- but what must be said again and again is that most of these substandard dwellings are owned as investment properties by people who live elsewhere, and that crowded into these substandard dwellings are the hopeless poor who are forced to pay fantastically high rents because they have no place to go.

Without urban renewal there is no way of rehabilitating these rock-bottom slums or the poor who live in them. We are here reminded of the lament of Pope Pius XII:
"It is necessary to bring up the sad example of the exploitation of slum areas? Dilapidated ramshackled houses without the most necessary hygienic installations sometimes yield a sizeable income to their owners without costing them a penny. Inevitably, they neglect to make necessary repairs in them for years on end. " Enough can never be said about the harm that these dwellings do to the families condemned to live in them.

But bad housing is not the only problem in New Orleans which urban renewal can solve. Our street paving program is so disastrously behind schedule that an estimated $120 million dollars would be required to pave our present streets. Our total annual city budget for all salaries, services, facilities and expansions is only slightly over $40 million. In any urban renewal area, two-thirds of the street paving bill would be financed with federal funds.

AT PRESENT OUR CITY is struggling to provide recreation facilities and programs. In 1966 New Orleans spent $1.25 per capita on recreation. Dallas spent $2.44 and Austin spent $4.60 per capita. Although urban renewal does not provide for recreation supervision, a neighborhood facilities grant would pay for two-thirds the cost of developing neighborhood facilities in an urban renewal area. This is particularly appealing in view of the dearth of recreational facilities in some areas such as the Desire community where thousands of children for years have had no recreation facility but one privately donated empty lot.

New Orleans pays its just share of federal tax money. Considering our present financial plight, it seems grossly unfair that we should be financing urban renewal in 49 other states and yet are prevented by our state legislature from using such funds for our own needs.

WHAT IS OUR FUTURE WITHOUT URBAN RENEWAL?

The rate of population reproduction in the U.S. is 1.7 percent. At this rate our population will double in the next 35 years. This factor, plus the increasing migration of our rural population to the cities, indicates that in the next generation New Orleans will double in size. Or, to put it another way, another New Orleans, reduplicating its present housing, its present facilities and its present needs, will be built in and around us. If the same processes that built our present New Orleans (with all due apologies to its charm) are allowed to work in the same unrestricted fashion, the result may be an irreparable hodge-podge of slums and congestion.

We are already falling behind in our efforts to cope with our urban problems.

Some of the opposition to urban renewal is generated by mistakes made in urban renewal almost 20 years ago. Since then, laws have been refined and redesigned to insure a maximum concern for individuals.

For example, consider rehabilitation gransts and loans. In an urban renewal or code enforcement area, a low-income owner-occupant of a substandard dwelling can receive an outright grant of $1500 and a 20 - year loan at 3 percent to help bring his home up to standard.

Small businessmen are given long-term low interest loans in reestablishing a business if they have been displaced by the program.

Further, the municipality is obliged to assure that all families who are displaced must be offered decent, safe and sanitary housing within their means and to provide help both technical and financial in the relocation process.

WHILE MUCH OPOSITION to urban renewal is an outcry of sincere concern for mistakes that were made in the past, it seems that most oposition stems from the same unenlightened, self-righteous individualism that produced our urban problems in the first place. There seems to be an unawareness that we are social beings and that our rights are subservient to the common good. The common good, as Catholic theologians describe it, is not merely the total of individual goods within a community. It is rather a whole which is greater than the sum of its parts. As John XXIII stated: "The individual, as the beneficiary of this common good, is in some measure its guardian." (Code of Social Principles)

"The attainment of the common good is the sole reason for the existence of civil authorities. In working for the common good, therefore, the authorities must obviously respect its nature, and at the same time adjust their legislation to meet the requirements of the given situation." (Pacem in Terris)

URBAN REHABILITATION

The Federal Housing Administration reports 35 million Americans live in substandard and slum housing.

A nation-wide FHA survey estimates 9.2 million deteriorated apartment units require immediate rehabilitation (walls, ceilings, floors, roofs, heating plants, windows, doors, kitchen, bath and electrical accessories). These units are concentrated in 60 to 70 metropolitan areas.

Until recently, land clearance and new construction were considered the answer to moderate and low income housing requirements. This singular approach to solving substandard housing conditions has proven unsatisfactory and is now being replaced by increased emphasis on rehabilitating existing structures.

This change to neighborhood rehabilitation is based on the following experiences:

- Most deteriorated buildings are structurally sound.
- If deteriorated buildings were demolished and rebuilt, it would take about 30 years to catch up with the slum problem.
- Rehabilitation costs are approximately 1/2 new construction costs.
- When neighborhoods are demolished, tenant displacement causes serious sociological problems.
- Small businesses never recover in demolished neighborhoods.

Recent federal legislation (1965 Housing and Urban Development Act) and executive appointments (Secretary of Housing and Urban Development) indicate a determined government effort to rehabilitate deteriorated urban housing.

United States Gypsum, a building materials manufacturer interested in new opportunities, decided to take positive action to answer the urban rehabilitation challenge. This progress report on the New York Rehabilitation Project describes our efforts to date concerning one rehabilitation experiment.

UNITED STATES GYPSUM

NEW YORK REHABILITATION PROJECT

United States Gypsum is cooperating with the Federal Housing Administration and the New York City Rent and Rehabilitation Administration in a rehabilitation project to determine those financial and construction techniques necessary to profitably rehabilitate substandard multiple dwellings in urban areas.

United States Gypsum purchased and plans to rehabilitate six deteriorated Harlem tenements in an attempt to answer the following:

1) Can a structurally sound building be brought up to acceptable living standards through extensive renovation?

2) Would necessary renovation costs be low enough to provide attractive investment return (acquisition-rehabilitation) through increased rental value?

The first building detailed in this report was purchased for land value ($30,000) and rehabilitated ($189,019) with United States Gypsum monies ($219,019 total). This was done to initiate the project as quickly as possible. The second building is now in the demolition stage and will be processed through FHA for financial comparison. Third and fourth building plans are final and demolition will begin soon.

Since the first building was rehabilitated with standard construction products and systems, this experience alone cannot be representative of the entire project.

First building rehabilitation costs and product application techniques were successful. But total rehabilitation experience in all six buildings will be necessary before United States Gypsum rehabilitation techniques can be analyzed and presented to private interests.

AT DEMOLITION STAGE

After architectural plans and specifications were prepared, the construction contract was awarded to a New York general contractor on a cost plus fee basis.

Prior to demolition, USG paid the tenants' moving expenses to other buildings in the project. All tenants had the choice to return to the first building after rehabilitation.

Demolition involved site removal of all interior plaster, lath, studs, windows, doors, plumbing, wiring, heating plant, store front, roof cornice and fire escapes.

After demolition, exterior and interior load-bearing walls, stairwells and wood floor joists remained.

ENTRANCE HALL FINISHED WITH USG EPOXY PAINT

DESCRIPTION: A new development in paint products featuring an extremely hard surface and high gloss "ceramic-like" appearance. The system provides a tough, highly sanitary finish with outstanding impact and abrasion resistance.

APPLICABILITY TO REHABILITATION: Epoxy paint was used in public areas in the first building. It is especially applicable to rehabilitation jobs because:

- It provides an extremely durable surface.
- It can be washed down easily and frequently, saves on maintenance costs.
- It has outstanding impact and abrasion resistance.
- It is resistant to mildew, fungi, alkalis and acids.

APPLICATION: In Building #1, an acryllic epoxy was used in the halls and public areas. It was not used inside apartments because New York law requires repainting of apartments every three years and it is thus more economical to use regular paints in these areas.

Existing plaster was uneven and patched. It had to be taken off down to the brick. A washcoat of Structolite plaster was used over the raw bricks to prepare the surface. Then two coats of USG Epoxy Enamel were applied. An attractive appearance was obtained by spraying black and yellow paint over a white base, providing a spatter effect.

MASTICAL FLOOR LEVELING UNDER ASPHALT TILE

PRODUCT INNOVATION . . . . . MASTICAL FLOOR LEVELING

DESCRIPTION: MASTICAL is a gypsum cement mixed with an asphalt emulsion and sand. It can be used for leveling any uneven floor.

APPLICABILITY TO REHABILITATION: Floors of older deteriorated buildings are often uneven and patched, and must be leveled before finish material is applied. Various products have been used for this purpose, among them plywood, Portland cement, certain plastic materials. MASTICAL has proved best for rehabilitation because it is cheaper than plywood and sets more quickly than Portland cement and the plastic materials. It is recommended for rehabilitation work because:

- MASTICAL is economical.
- It sets up very quickly. Heavy structural loads can be put on the floor within 8 hours. (This cannot be done with any other floor leveling.)
- Floor covering can be applied directly to it.

APPLICATION: The original 1" T&G wood floors were deflected. These were shored up and patched. Wire mesh was put down and MASTICAL troweled on. Asphalt tile was laid over the MASTICAL.

NEW REFRIGERATOR, RANGE, CABINETS, SINK - THERMALUX ELECTRIC HEAT CEILING

DESCRIPTION: USG's THERMALUX Electric Heating System, used in the first building, is a cableless ceiling heating system employing the principle of radiant heating. THERMALUX ceiling panels provide a new ceiling as well as a new heating system since both go in at the same time. Each panel contains a single, large-area wireless resistor, providing the exact amount of heat needed for comfort while operating at 100 degrees--almost as low as natural body temperature.

APPLICABILITY TO REHABILITATION: THERMALUX was found to be particularly well suited to rehabilitation. Features of the system which make it applicable:

- Initial installation costs much lower than replacement expense on hot water boiler with risers and radiation equipment.
- Reduced cost for maintenance or janitorial service versus typical hot water heat.
- New ceilings obtained by furring below existing ceiling and installing THERMALUX.
- Furred space of ceiling provided area to economically run new plumbing and electrical wiring.
- Space in apartments critical, no loss when THERMALUX specified.
- Security aspects of THERMALUX are excellent for this type neighborhood--it's tamper-proof and non-removable.

APPLICATION: THERMALUX heating panels were installed by carpenters and wired by electricians. A central meter was installed for the entire building and landlord billed for heating costs. Each apartment was given separate thermostat so that tenants could regulate temperature according to individual need. The system is flexible, however, so that each apartment can be on a separate meter, and each room can be separately thermostated.

URBAN STUDIES FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

July 1969

PURPOSE

The HUD Urban Studies Fellowship Program is a response to a critical national need for trained urban generalists and specialists. Its purpose is twofold: 1) to attract the most capable persons to the expanding field of urban development; and 2) to encourage institutions to initiate innovative programs, and to support those programs which approach the challenge of urban development from the economic and social, as well as physical, points of view.

ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

Students accepted or enrolled for full-time study as candidates for a graduate degree in an eligible program. Applicants must be United States citizens or non-citizen nationals, or non-citizens who have applied for United States citizenship or have obtained a permanent residence visa.

ELIGIBLE PROGRAMS

Awards are made in graduate degree programs of study in public and private non-profit institutions in such fields as city and regional planning, urban affairs, urban public administration, urban sociology, urban law, and other similar programs which are oriented to public service careers in urban affairs. Such programs must be academically accredited and have submitted to HUD an assurance of compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Only programs in the United States, Puerto Rico, and its overseas possessions are eligible.

Most awards are for the master's or other first professional degree. Only a limited number of awards for doctoral study are made.

Individuals apply directly to HUD. Fellowships are awarded by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development upon the recommendation of the Urban Studies Fellowship Advisory Board, composed of nine members from public and private universities and national organizations. Awards are announced April 1 of each year for study to begin during following academic year.

STIPEND AND ALLOWANCES

Up to $3,000 per year, plus $500 for each dependent up to two. Tuition and fees are paid directly to the Institution by HUD.

APPLICATIONS AND FURTHER INFORMATION

Further information and applications for HUD Fellowships may be obtained by writing to this address:

U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development
Washington, D. C. 20410

Applications are planned to be available in October.

NUMBER OF AWARDS AVAILABLE

Between 100 and 110 fellowships are awarded each year. Of these, between 30 an are ordinarily renewals of fellowships awarded the previous year.

ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS

Partial lists of available graduate programs in city planning, urban studies and related fields may be found in the Guide to Graduate Studies, published by the American Council on Education, and in the annual listing of "Earned Degrees Conferred" prepared by the U. S. Office of Education. All graduate programs which emphasize the social, economic and physical aspects of urban development are eligible to participate in the HUD Fellowship Program.

IN REPLY REFER TO:

This is in response to your recent request for information on the HUD Urban Studies Fellowship Program.

The Urban Studies Fellowship Awards are made by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development upon the recommendation of the Urban Studies Fellowship Advisory Board, composed of nine members from public and private universities and national organizations.

Grants are made for full-time graduate study, primarily in fields involved in the social, economic, and physical development problems of urban areas, with emphasis on the coordination of the physical and social aspects of community development. The programs of study should be oriented to careers in city and regional planning housing, urban renewal, community development, and other types of urban public service.

Urban studies fellowships allow a stipend of up to $3,000 plus a dependency allowance of $500 for each of up to two dependents. Tuition and fees are paid directly to the university by HUD.

Enclosed is additional information on the HUD Fellowship Program. The closing date for receiving applications for awards for study during the 1970-71 academic year was January 15. Awards will be announced April 1. Application kits for the 1971-72 academic year will be available around September or October of this year.

Sincerely,

Sandra J. Watson

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS 1970

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is a temporary, independent, bipartisan agency established by Congress in 1957 and directed to:

Investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, or national origin, or by reason of fraudulent practices;

Study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution;

Appraise Federal laws and policies with respect to equal protection of the laws;

Serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to denials of equal protection of the laws; and Submit reports, findings, and recommendations to the President and the Congress.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for arranging the last minute appointment for me while I was in Atlanta last Friday. I am very pleased to have been able to present the program of the Office of Minority Business Enterprise as it relates to non-profit institutions, especially MESBIC (Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Company). I am enclosing some literature on MESBIC's and either Mr. Derek "Pete" Hansen who is in charge of the MESBIC program for this office, or myself will be available to answer any questions you might have on this unique financing mechanism.

Since the response of the Southern religious denominations to our presentations on Friday was quite positive, I believe we will be returning to Atlanta later this year. Please let me know how we may be of service to the SRC.

Sincerely,

O. H. Eisenau

INTRODUCTION

This Data Access Description (PA-1 Revised) describes the various types of unpublished data and special services available from the Bureau of the Census and outlines the Bureau's policy regarding availability and cost of such data products and services. Changes which have been effected in the policy governing access to such data or services since the original PA-1 (issued February 1968) are reflected in this publication. Additional information on cost considerations in obtaining Census Bureau data and services is included in Data Access Description, PA-2, February 1968.

In the allocation of resources and priorities, the Bureau attempts to give appropriate weight to all available output forms which best serve the users within the legal and regulatory authority governing the Bureau's work. Printed reports continue to be utilized as the major vehicles for the release of data from the Bureau's censuses and surveys, but the increased use of electronic data processing equipment by the Bureau and the public now permits a variety of other output methods--computer tapes, punchcards, microfilm, microfiche--for the dissemination of statistical summaries. The printed reports as well as summary tapes, microform releases, special tabulations, maps, and computer programs are described in the Bureau of the Census Catalog.[1]

CONFIDENTIALITY

The data which the Bureau of the Census has collected from individual persons, households, or firms are strictly confidential. These data are available only as statistical summaries and may be used for statistical purposes only. The limitation on the release of information is a matter of law (Title 13, U.S. Code) which Census Bureau employees are sworn to uphold.

The Bureau of the Census cannot furnish copies of individual returns or issue any statistics or related information which would identify individual respondents. Computer tapes and punchcards containing information from individual records do not carry the names of respondents or establishments but usually contain geographic information which might make identification possible; consequently, these basic data files are not available to persons other than Census Bureau employees.

The protection of confidentiality also extends to names and addresses; thus the Census Bureau cannot supply lists of private persons or firms reporting to it.

UNPUBLISHED DATA

Data Files

Types of Data Files.--The Bureau's tape and punchcard files are of two basic types: (1) Those containing the basic records on individual respondents--the returns for each person, establishment, etc., and (2) those containing statistical totals--summarizations for small areas or for detailed subject classifications. The tapes or punchcards containing census basic individual records (type 1) are confidential, and therefore the Bureau cannot release them but can prepare special tabulations from them. Also, certain extracts from these individual records on tapes and punchcards can be purchased from the Bureau. For example, the Bureau has prepared for sale on tape and punchcards a 1/1,000 and a 1/10,000 sample of modified individual records from the 1960 Censuses of Population and Housing by removing all information that might make possible the identification of any person, household, or housing unit. A 1/100 sample of individual records from the 1960 Censuses of Population and Housing is expected to be available in late fall of 1970, and comparable samples from 1970 census data are scheduled to be available in 1971.

Technical Information.--Some of the available summary tapes contain small-area totals which were subsequently added together by computer to obtain the results required for the published tables. These summary tapes are generally useful for further machine processing to obtain totals for geographic areas not provided for separately in the published reports. A major portion of the results from the 1970 Census of Population and Housing will be released on summary tapes. Six different tape series, the First through the Sixth Counts, are expected to be released. Since summary data do not provide records of specific individuals, a summary tape user cannot re-summarize data to provide cross-tabulations of characteristics different from those which already appear in a specific summary tape file. Categories may be collapsed or aggregated but cannot be further broken down or cross-tabulated in any different way. Users can manipulate geographic tabulation units to some extent--e.g., groups of blocks can be combined into user-defined neighborhoods, census tracts into local planning areas, etc.--but no tabulations from the tapes are possible for areas smaller than the smallest area identified on the tape, or for areas which cannot be made up of entire units identified on tapes.

In some cases, the data on the summary tapes can also be obtained as printouts of the tape content. Such displays are accompanied by technical memorandums explaining the content and organization of the display and supplying identification for the totals.

In addition to the data files containing unpublished data, some tape or punchcard files which contain the same statistics that are found in published reports are available; these files are made available for users who wish to summarize further or rearrange the published data. Examples of such data files are the computer tape and punchcard versions of the last four editions of the County and City Data Book.

All unpublished data (i.e., tapes, punchcards, microfilm, etc.) furnished by the Bureau will be accompanied, so far as possible, by descriptions of the data, appropriate statements relative to the limitations of the data, a layout of the record format, identification of the code structure used, and other needed technical documentation.

Many of the available files of summary tapes and punchcards are byproducts of the work of processing data for the purpose of preparing tables for published reports and may contain impediments of various types when they are to be used for other purposes. Corrections made in the final publication have not always been carried back to the data file tapes. These and other technical difficulties may require careful handling by the user and perhaps some correction of minor discrepancies and inconsistencies if the data files are to be used in intensive analyses or with tabulation programs that require absolute consistency in the data. The Census Bureau can deliver copies of these machine-readable data files as they stand; however, the Bureau cannot take the responsibility for correcting, for individual users, deficiencies that may be discovered during further processing of these data.

Discontinuance of Data Files.--It is not possible to specify generally how long data files are maintained at the Bureau; the tapes are erased and the punchcards disposed of when it seems unlikely that additional use will be made of them. However, when data files for a particular survey are to be kept only for a specified time and then discarded, this information is noted in the appropriate entry of the Bureau of the Census Catalog. In other cases, a notice of discontinuance is given in the Catalog when data files which have been listed previously are to be discarded.

Special Tabulations or Transcriptions of Data

Certain detailed data files in the form of punchcards and computer tapes can be processed to provide almost unlimited subject cross-classifications and area tabulations. Tabulations prepared from individual records are reviewed by the Bureau to make certain that the results are in such summary form that no individual information is disclosed, in accordance with the rules of confidentiality. Special tabulations or transcriptions of data in the files of the Bureau of the Census will be undertaken on a cost basis, insofar as Bureau facilities are available.

Special tabulations will be undertaken with the understanding that:

1. The material may be published subsequently by the Bureau and made generally available either without charge or at cost of reproduction if the Bureau regards the material to be of general interest. If such action is taken within the time period specified in the agreement, or within 6 months if no time period is specified in the agreement, the Bureau will notify all purchasers of its decision to publish the tabulation.

2. If not published, a tabulation may be made available to other Government agencies or to appropriate nonprofit research groups without charge or at cost of duplication.

If for any reason the Bureau feels that the purchaser of a special tabulation is making unfair or improper use of the information furnished, it may take such action as is deemed appropriate to protect the public interest.

In order to keep the public informed of special tabulations that are available, the Bureau lists those for which copies are retained in Part II of the Bureau of the Census Catalog.

Other Materials

Some other unpublished information is also available from the Bureau of the Census, including maps, computer programs, and summary tape test reels and other materials related to the 1970 Census of Population and Housing. These materials are listed in Part II of the Bureau of the Census Catalog when they become available.

SPECIAL SERVICES

Kinds of Special Services

Special Surveys for Original Data.--The Bureau will undertake projects that involve original collection of data on a reimbursable basis when the following conditions are present:

1. It has been determined by the Bureau of the Census that there is a public interest in the survey results. Before being undertaken by the Bureau of the Census, the survey must also be approved by the Office of Management and Budget in accordance with the Federal Reports Act.

2. Understanding has been reached between the customer and the Bureau of the Census, with respect to plans for publication or other uses of the data, to maintain appropriate standards of accuracy and quality and to include qualifications or credits to assure protection of the Bureau of the Census and the public interest.

3. Understanding has been reached between the customer and the Bureau of the Census with respect to the confidential nature of the information furnished by respondents. The individual returns from such surveys must remain the property of the Bureau of the Census. Special tabulations may be made available to public or private groups from such returns under the same conditions as from regular Bureau records. The data collected will be subject to the same confidential treatment with respect to individual returns as is true in the case of other Bureau surveys; that is, no information will be released which might disclose the activities or the identity of any persons or organizations.

Personal Census Records Service.--The Bureau of the Census maintains a staff of employees at Pittsburg, Kans., whose function is to search the various Federal censuses of population to provide at a nominal cost personal data from these records to individuals who lack other documents of birth or citizenship. Extracts from these records are often accepted as evidence of age and place of birth, for obtaining employment, social security benefits, old-age assistance, passports, naturalization papers, delayed birth certificates, and for other purposes. Because the personal information recorded in the census of 1900 and later censuses is confidential, it may be furnished only upon the written request of the person himself or his legal representative. Application forms, with more detailed information, may be obtained by writing to the Bureau of the Census, Pittsburg, Kans. 66762. Information concerning the fees for this service is given in the section on "Cost of Special Services," below.

Data Processing and Other Services.--The Bureau undertakes data processing and programing services for Federal, State, and local governments when the project requires access to Bureau records and materials. As a matter of policy, however, it does not provide nongovernmental agencies with any programing and computer processing services which may compete with private suppliers of these same services.

The Bureau's resources can be made available for such services as designing sample surveys, collecting data by mail or field enumeration, tabulating tapes and punchcards provided by the customer, providing population estimates and projections, and giving other technical assistance. The Census Bureau's skills and facilities in these areas may be utilized to aid other Federal agencies, as well as State and local governments and private groups.

Central Users' Service for 1970 Census.--Specific requests for special services pertaining to the 1970 Census of Population and Housing which cannot be supplied by the standard series of printed reports will be handled by the recently established Central Users' Service. Although located in the Population Division, the Central Users' Service handles requests for housing, population, and some geographic materials from the 1970 census. This unit coordinates the data delivery activities of the Bureau's operating divisions in order to provide the user with census materials or special tabulation cost and time estimates; it serves as the focal point for receiving users' requests for summary tapes, special tabulations, computer program packages, and related decennial census products.

The Bureau has determined that, insofar as resources permit, such special requests will be handled on a concurrent basis with the regular tabulation and publication program.

Scheduling of Work and Services

The Bureau's processing facilites are large, but not unlimited. Priorities in accepting or scheduling special reimbursable work or services, therefore, are given to work of urgency for national defense or other matters of national interest, work for other Federal agencies, and work for State and local governments. Other work will be given priority in the order in which it is accepted. Providing the summary tapes from the 1970 census is not considered to be "special" reimbursable work; therefore, requests for these tapes will be handled in order of receipt. It may be necessary, because of the pressure of higher priority work, to reject special reimbursable projects that would otherwise be acceptable.

Cost of Special Services

It is the policy of the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of the Census to relieve the general public from bearing the cost of special services to private groups and individuals, who will be charged at cost for such services. It is also Census Bureau policy to furnish specialized services to other government agencies at cost.

The cost of special services is determined on the basis of such factors as the quantity of data requested, the amount of work required to obtain the data, the complexity of the data specifications supplied by the user, processing costs for personnel and equipment, and the format (photocopies, punchcards, computer tapes, etc.) in which the data are made available to the users, as well as planning costs and appropriate charges for overhead expenses.

The cost of such special services and tabulations is the actual cost of the project to the Census Bureau, including the cost of planning and the appropriate charges for overhead expenses; the cost of collecting the data is not included in the charge unless special questions have been added to the questionnaire at the purchaser's request or an entire survey is undertaken for the sponsoring organization.

A request by other than a government agency for a tabulation already prepared for another purchaser will generally be handled in the following manner, if the information has not already been published by the Bureau (see "Special Tabulations or Transcriptions of Data" above):

1. If a job has not been completed, the costs will be appropriately divided and results will be furnished to both parties.

2. When, within the time period specified in the original agreement, information furnished to commercial groups or private individuals is requested by other commercial groups or individuals, the subsequent party or parties will be charged not less than the amount paid by the first party obtaining the information. Specified time periods will generally not exceed 18 months. If no time period is indicated in the agreement, this provision will apply for 6 months from the date of delivery to the initial purchaser. If the cost to the Bureau for furnishing the information to the subsequent party is significantly less than that charged for the original information and the information is furnished within the agreed-upon time period referred to above, the total cost will be prorated among the various parties in an equitable manner as determined by the Bureau and refunds made as necessary, provided that the amount for refund exceeds 10 percent of the cost of the original job, or $25, whichever is larger. After the specified period, subsequent requests for the same tabulation will be filled at only the additional cost, if any, to the Bureau, and no refunds to prior purchasers will be considered.

The fee charged for personal census records service (described above) is $4 for cases handled in order of receipt, or $5 for an expedited search of the records.

1970 Census Users' Guide Part 1 and Part 2

The 1970 Census Users' Guide is a two-part publication designed to furnish most of the information data users will need for effective access and use of 1970 census data products.

Part 1 of the Guide (standard, paper-bound publication) includes the text and three appendixes. The text covers such subjects as the collection and processing of 1970 data, data delivery media (computer tapes, microfilm, and printed materials), maps and information on how to obtain census materials. The appendixes are:

1970 Census Users' Dictionary - defines concepts associated with population and housing tabulations and geographic areas relevant to the collection and publication of data.

Comparison of Printed Reports and Summary Tapes summarizes and compares the contents of the reports and tapes.

Glossary - defines many terms used in connection with collecting, processing, and publishing census data, and lists many abbreviations relevant to the census.

Part 2 of the Guide (prepunched for 3-ring binder) contains appendixes specifically related to the use of census summary tapes and the Address Coding Guide.

Technical Conventions and Character Set - present information on the physical characteristics, format, and languages associated with tapes released by the Bureau.

1st-4th Count Technical Documentation - describes the arrangement of geographic codes and census data on the first four series of summary tapes.

Address Coding Guide Technical Documentation - furnishes information on the format and content of ACG's.

Many data users will find both Parts 1 and 2 of great value. Part 1, with its comprehensive coverage of the decennial census program, data products, and related services, is an important instructional and reference tool. Part 2, concerned exclusively with computer tape products, is designed particularly for those who plan to obtain tapes or who want complete information on the data content of the summary tapes.

TO : ALL PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SUBJ: EXPIRATION OF WORLD WAR II VETERANS' ENTITLEMENT

1. The maximum eligibility for GI loan benefits of World War II veterans will expire on July 25, 1967. To protect these veterans' entitlement, necessary steps should be taken to see that the application for loan guaranty or insurance or loan report is received by VA prior to the termination date.

2. Since World War II veterans will in no event have entitlement after July 25, 1967, and since the entitlement of some World War II veteran loan applicants will expire before that, the VA urges that in any case in which the expiration date of the loan applicant's entitlement is not known, either because he has no Certificate of Eligibility or he has a Certificate which lacks a terminal date ("validity date"), the following be sent to the VA as soon as possible:

a. Completed VA Form 26-1880, Request for Determination of Eligibility and Available Loan Guaranty Entitlement.

b. Discharge or separation papers.

c. Application for guaranty (VA Form 26-1802, VA Form 26-1802a, VA Form 26-1822 or VA Form 26-1842 as appropriate) completed to the extent feasible.

This will guard against the expiration of entitlement before a determination of the terminal date can be made; so long, of course, as entitlement has not already expired. If you have a case in which you know the terminal date of entitlement and an application for guaranty cannot be submitted to reach the VA before that date, telephone us at 526-4305 and explain the problem. Lenders are requested, however, to confine applications not accompanied by supporting documents to cases where the veteran's entitlement may expire before all supporting papers can be submitted to the VA.

3. The term "application for loan guaranty or insurance" applies to "prior approval" loans and includes VA Form 26-1802 or VA Form 26-1802a, Application for Home Loan Guaranty or Insurance; VA Form 26-1822, Application for Farm Loan Guaranty or Insurance; and VA Form 26-1842, Application for Business Loan Guaranty or Insurance. The term "loan report" applies to "automatic" loans and includes VA Form 26-1820, Report of Home Loan Processed on Automatic Basis; VA Form 4-1840, Report of Farm Loan Processed on Automatic Basis; and VA Form 4-1860, Report of Business Loan Processed on Automatic Basis. In addition, a loan guaranty application or loan report is considered to be timely received insofar as expiration of entitlement is concerned, under the following circumstances:

a. With respect to prior approval loans, if a request for a determination of reasonable value (VA Form 26-1805 or letter request) is received from a lender prior to the expiration of the entitlement of the veteran-purchaser and the veteran's name is shown on the request as the prospective purchaser and the sales price is also indicated, or

b. If a VA Form 26-1805 or letter request for appraisal is submitted by a party other than the lender making the loan, if the prospective veteran-purchaser, the sales price, and the prospective lender are shown on the request and if that lender substantiates in writing that the veteran applied to it for a loan prior to the expiration of his entitlement, or

c. Where a master certificate of reasonable value is outstanding on a project, the veteran applied to the lender for a guaranteed home loan on a particular property listed on the master certificate of reasonable value prior to expiration of his entitlement and the lender substantiates in writing that the veteran applied to it for a GI loan to purchase the property prior to the expiration of his entitlement, or

d. In cases where a "loan report" is received from a supervised lender after the expiration of the borrower's entitlement, evidence of guaranty may be issued if the loan was closed on an automatic basis and disbursement accomplished prior to the expiration of entitlement and the loan is otherwise eligible, or

e. If an application or loan report form is received by a VA field office prior to the expiration of the veteran's entitlement, provided the application has been properly executed by the lender and the veteran. If the supporting documents which usually accompany an application cannot be obtained and submitted to the VA prior to the expiration of the borrower's entitlement, the application may be submitted without the supporting documents. In such cases the VA office must, of course, defer further action on the application pending receipt of the supporting papers.

4. Lenders, builders, brokers, and other GI loan program participants should make a special effort to see that a loan guaranty application or loan report is submitted to the VA so that it will be received by VA before the veteran's entitlement expires. There have been instances in which veterans have initiated action to purchase a home through GI financing in sufficient time for a loan application to be submitted, but their entitlement was lost because an application was not promptly submitted to VA by the lender. A veteran's application to the VA for a Certificate of Eligibility is not a loan application, nor is his entitlement preserved by signing a purchase contract. A veteran's application to a lender for a loan does not constitute compliance with the timeliness requirements of the law, unless the facts of the case come within one of the categories listed above. The loss of entitlement is a serious matter to a veteran who is anxious to utilize his loan benefits. The VA has no authority to extend the period of a veteran's eligibility or waive the requirements of the governing law as to timeliness of applications for guaranty. The cooperation of all program participants in efforts to prevent such unfortunate occurrences will be appreciated.

5. With respect to direct loans made by the VA, builders, sellers, brokers and others should note that a direct loan may not be made to a veteran after the expiration of entitlement unless the VA issues a commitment to the veteran prior to the termination of his entitlement.

Sincerely yours,

PIERRE NOEL, JR.

1. Arrangements for keys may be made at this office or our Management Brokers listed below.
2. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot.
3. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms.
4. Frame designation (Fr.) includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - Brick Veneer; Alum - Aluminum; Conc. Blk. - Conctete Block.
5. Prices quoted are for properties in their "as is" condition unless indicated as repaired - Rep.
6. Offers Pending - OP.
7. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Prepaid items will be prorated. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.
8. When properties are purchased "as is", the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent, rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA. Rental exceptions may be made in some cases where minor repairs are involved. However, VA written approval is required in all cases.
9. All offers received within 48 hours after the date of mailing of our sales listing will be considered as received simultaneously. Be sure to inform your prospective buyer accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, down payment required, etc. Between equal offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.
10. Minimum cash down payment may be $200.00 with maximum terms of loan up to 30 years at 6% interest.

NOTE:

1. Arrangements for keys may be made at this office or our Management Brokers listed below.

2. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot.

3. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms.

4. Frame designation (Fr.) includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - Brick Veneer; Alum - Aluminum; Conc. Blk. - Concrete Block.

5. Prices quoted are for properties in their "as is" condition unless indicated as repaired - Rep.

6. Offers Pending - OP.

7. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Prepaid items will be prorated. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

8. When properties are purchased "as is", the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent, rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA. Rental exceptions may be made in some cases where minor repairs are involved. However, VA written approval is required in all cases.

9. All offers received within 48 hours after the date of mailing of our sales listing will be considered as received simultaneously. Be sure to inform your prospective buyer accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, down payment required, etc. Between equal offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

10. Minimum cash down payment may be $200.00 with maximum terms of loan up to 30 years at 6% interest.

    You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans.

11. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing.

SUBJ: New Loan Guaranty Provisions--WW II Veterans

The following Loan Guaranty provisions in S. 16 which the President signed on August 31 become effective October 1, 1967.

1. Loan Guaranty terminal date for WW II veterans extended to July 25, 1970. For savings clause concerning cases involving current expiration of entitlement under phase-out formula see paragraph three.

2. Any application received from lender prior to expiration date of WW II veterans' entitlement under statutory phase-out formula may be processed and guaranty commitment issued at this time. Expiration date of entitlement of WW II veterans discharged from service because of service-connected disability will be July 25, 1970.

3. Any WW II veteran whose entitlement expiration date on his certificate of eligibility is July 25, 1967, may be issued eligibility certificate showing new expiration date under phase-out formula, or showing expiration date of July 25, 1970 if he was discharged or released from service because of service-connected disability. Important to note, however, that in any case in which application of statutory phase-out formula results in an entitlement expiration date of July 26 or any subsequent date up to and including December 29, the expiration date will be December 30, 1967. This action required by savings clause in S. 16 which states that whenever application of phase-out formula results in expiration date of July 26 or thereafter entitlement nevertheless will not be deemed to expire earlier than 90 days after effective date of the Act, which is October 1.

4. The Act does not extend or revise entitlement which expired under the phase-out formula prior to July 26, 1967.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS W. BODKIN

SUBJ: Sales Activities (VA-Owned Properties)

It has come to our attention that some salesmen negotiating sales of VA-Owned properties have told the prospective purchasers that the houses were guaranteed against any defects for a period of one year.

You are requested to instruct all your representatives that this is contrary to VA policy and procedures. Your attention is directed to Section II, Terms of Purchase on VA Form 26-6705:

> "I have examined this property and agree to accept same in its present "as is" condition, and further agree that VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect thereto."

Our management brokers are finding that in some cases properties are being left unlocked, keys not returned to lok-boxes, and the inspection record cards are not being signed. Lok-boxes and keys are being removed prior to closing of sale. Also in the closing of a sale the lok-boxes are not being returned immediately to the management broker, as required.

Strict adherence to these requirements is absolutely necessary to protect all brokers participating in our program, as well as the United States Government. Accordingly, your full cooperation and that of your salesmen and associates is needed and requested. Failure to observe these requirements may result in a broker's suspension from participating in the sale of Veterans Administration properties.

Your cooperation in this connection will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS W. BODKIN

SUBJ: Public Law 89-44, amending Section 4361 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

1. Section 4361 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, relating to the documentary stamp tax on conveyances of real estate, was amended by Public Law 89-44, approved June 21, 1965, as follows:

> "The tax imposed by this section shall not apply on or after January 1, 1968."

2. Under the Documentary Stamp Tax Regulations, the tax attaches at the time the deed is delivered. Thus, under the new law, stamps will not be required on deeds delivered on or after January 1, 1968. Accordingly, this stamp tax expense will not be incurred or paid where not required by law.

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. Minimum terms $200 down, balance payable monthly at 6 % for terms up to 30 years, dependent on age, condition and other factors. Preference will be given to offers providing for largest cash payment and shortest term of repayment. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Forms 26-6703 (Instructions to VA Sales Brokers) and VA Form 26-6705 (Credit Statement and Offer of Prospective Purchaser), on which latter form all offers must be submitted. This listing cancels all previous listings. All listings are subject to VA acquiring title.

NOTE:

1. Arrangements for keys may be made at this office or our Management Brokers listed below.

2. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot.

3. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms.

4. Frame designation (Fr.) includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - Brick Veneer; Alum. - Aluminum; Conc. Blk. - Concrete Block.

5. Prices quoted are for properties in their "as is" condition unless indicated as repaired - Rep.

6. Offers Pending - OP

7. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Prepaid items will be prorated. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

8. When properties are purchased "as is", the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent, rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA. Rental exceptions may be made in some cases where minor repairs are involved. However, VA written approval is required in all cases.

9. All offers received within 48 hours after the date of mailing of our sales listing will be considered as received simultaneously. Be sure to inform your prospective buyer accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, down payment required, etc. Between equal offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

10. Minimum cash down payment may be $200.00 with maximum terms of loan up to 30 years at 6% interest.
You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans.

11. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing. All listing subject to VA acquiring title.

INFORMATION LETTER

November 17, 1967

YOUR FILE REFERENCE:

IN REPLY REFER TO: 316-262

TO: ALL PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SUBJ: Charges, Fees and Discounts

1. Recent instances of misunderstanding and complaints by veterans as to closing cost, discounts, and payments for the property in addition to the contract price make it necessary that both the veteran and the lender have an awareness of all cost involved in the loan and that the Certification of Loan Disbursement and Report of Home Loan Processed on Automatic Basis reflect the facts.

2. The Lenders Handbook, VA Pamphlet 26-7, shows the items for which the veteran may pay the reasonable and customary amount. The schedule of items is set forth in Part I, pages II-13 and II-14, Change 1. Paragraphs (b) and (c), Section 36.4312, page 11-13, Change 1 of the Handbook specify that brokerage or other charges shall not be made against the veteran and that any commission or other consideration paid or payable by the veteran to a sales broker or another as agent of the veteran or otherwise shall not be considered as closing cost and shall be treated as part of the purchase price for the purpose of determining that the purchase price of the property is not in excess of the reasonable value.

3. VA Form 26-1820, Report of Home Loan Processed on Automatic Basis, and VA Form 26-1876, Certification of Loan Disbursement, require the lender to show the total purchase price, itemization of closing cost, other charges, cash from the veteran and other credits. In executing either of the forms, the lender certifies that it has not and will not impose any charges or fees against the veteran borrower in excess of those permissible, that the loan conforms otherwise to Title 38 USC and the regulations concerning guaranty of loans to veterans, and that all information reflected is true to the best of the lender's knowledge and belief.

4. Charges paid by the veteran in excess of closing cost or cost paid by the veteran other than the purchase price as specified by the contract render the loan ineligible for guaranty and the parties thereto are subject to the penalties provided by Federal statutes.

Sincerely yours,

PIERRE NOEL, JR.

SALES LISTING (MULTIPLE)

DATE 11-27-67

FROM: Property Management Sect., Loan Guaranty Div., Veterans Administration Regional Office. 730 Peachtree Street, N.E. Atlanta, Georgia 30308

NAME OF LOAN GUARANTY OFFICER: PIERRE NOEL, JR.

NAME OF CHIEF, PROPERTY MANAGEMENT SECTION: W. A. WALKER

TELEPHONE NO: 526-3474

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. Minimum terms: $200 down, balance payable monthly at 6 % for terms up to 30 years, dependent on age, condition and other factors. Preference will be given to offers providing for largest cash payment and shortest term of repayment. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Forms 26-6703 (Instructions to VA Sales Brokers) and VA Form 26-6705 (Credit Statement and Offer of Prospective Purchaser), on which latter form all offers must be submitted. This listing cancels all previous listings. All listings are subject to VA acquiring title.

NOTE:

1. Arrangements for keys may be made at this office or our Management Brokers listed below.

2. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot.

3. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms.

4. Frame designation (Fr.) includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - Brick Veneer; Alum. - Aluminum; Conc. Blk. - Concrete Block.

5. Prices quoted are for properties in their "as is" condition unless indicated as repaired - Rep.

6. Offers Pending - OP

7. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Prepaid items will be prorated. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

8. When properties are purchased "as is", the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent, rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA. Rental exceptions may be made in some cases where minor repairs are involved. However, VA written approval is required in all cases.

9. All offers received within 48 hours after the date of mailing of our sales listing will be considered as received simultaneously. Be sure to inform your prospective buyer accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, down payment required, etc. Between equal offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

10. Minimum cash down payment may be $200.00 with maximum terms of loan up to 30 years at 6% interest.
You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans.

11. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

SUBJ: Nondiscrimination Policy in Newspaper Advertising of VA-owned Properties for Sale or Rent

1. Effective February 15, 1968, newspaper advertising of the sale or rental of VA-owned properties, whether paid for entirely by the VA or toward which the VA is defraying a portion of the cost with broker participation, will carry a specific legend announcing VA's nondiscrimination policy as follows:

"VA sells its properties without discrimination."

2. The same legend shall be inserted in every advertisement of VA-owned properties for sale or rent, even where the entire cost is borne by the broker. Where advertising material is consolidated, the legend need appear only one time in the text. However, where advertising appears in several places, the legend must be contained in each advertisement.

SUBJ: Federal Documentary Stamp Tax - State of Georgia tax on transfer of real property effective January 1, 1968

1. Section 4361 of Internal Revenue Code of 1954, relating to the documentary stamp tax on conveyances of real estate, was amended by Public Law 89-44, approved June 21, 1965, as follows:

> "The tax imposed by this Section shall not apply on or after January 1, 1968."

2. Under the Documentary Stamp Tax regulations, the tax attaches at the time the deed is delivered. Thus, under the new law, stamps will not be required on deeds delivered on or after January 1, 1968.

3. Act No. 531 of the General Assembly of Georgia approved April 18, 1967 provides for a tax on each deed, instrument or other writing by which any real estate is sold, transferred or conveyed when the consideration or value of the interest or property conveyed exceeds one hundred dollars.

4. If the Federal Documentary Stamp Tax is extended Act No. 531 will become null and void. In the meantime deeds from the VA to purchasers of VA-owned properties will be subject to this tax, when such deeds are delivered on or after January 1, 1968. This tax will be paid by the purchaser at the sale closing.

5. Transfer tax under Act No. 531 must be paid to the Clerk of the Superior Court when the deed is filed for record as follows:

> "When the consideration or value of the interest or property conveyed (exclusive of the value of any lien or encumbrance remaining thereon at the time of sale) exceeds one hundred dollars, a tax at the rate of fifty cents for the first five hundred dollars or fractional part thereof, and at the rate of ten cents for each additional one hundred dollars or fractional part thereof."

NOTE:

1. Arrangements for keys may be made at this office or our Management Brokers listed below.

2. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot.

3. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms.

4. Frame designation (Fr.) includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - Brick Veneer; Alum. - Aluminum; Conc. Blk. - Concrete Block.

5. Prices quoted are for properties in their "as is" condition unless indicated as repaired - Rep.

6. Offers Pending - OP

7. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Prepaid items will be prorated. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

8. When properties are purchased "as is", the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent, rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA. Rental exceptions may be made in some cases where minor repairs are involved. However, VA written approval is required in all cases.

9. All offers received within 48 hours after the date of mailing of our sales listing will be considered as received simultaneously. Be sure to inform your prospective buyer accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, down payment required, etc. Between equal offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

10. Minimum cash down payment may be $200.00 with maximum terms of loan up to 30 years at 6% interest.
You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans.

11. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing.

1. VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin.

2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees and State Transfer Tax. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

10. Offers to Purchase or rent received after February 15, 1968 will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).

11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Forms 26-6703 (Instructions to VA Sales Brokers) and VA Form 26-6705 (Credit Statement and Offer of Prospective Purchaser), on which latter form all offers must be submitted. This listing cancels all previous listings.
All listings are subject to VA acquiring title.

PM NO	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin.

2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum. - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block. Offers pending - OP.

6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees and State Transfer Tax. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.

7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

10. Offers to Purchase or rent received after February 15, 1968 will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).

11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing. All listings are subject to VA acquiring title.

SUBJ: Increase in Interest Rate on VA-Owned Properties

1. Effective May 7, 1968, the interest rate on the sale of VA-owned properties financed by the VA (Veterans Administration) will be six and three-quarters percent. The six and three-quarters percent interest will be applicable to all offers received by the VA on and after this date. Our minimum down payment requirements with terms up to thirty years is not affected. Please note this change on your records and listings.

2. Your cooperation and interest in the sale of our properties is appreciated.

May 7, 1968

L. G. BULLETIN NO. 241

YOUR FILE REFERENCE:

IN REPLY REFER TO: 316/26

TO: ALL PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SUBJ: Public Law 90-301, Effective May 7, 1968

1. Public Law 90-301, effective May 7, 1968, changed the law governing the Home Loan Guaranty Program in certain respects as follows:

A. Increased the maximum amount of home loan guaranty from $7,500 to $12,500. No change was made in the maximum permissible percentage of guaranty (60%). Thus, the Law now provides for a guaranty of not to exceed 60% of the loan amount, or $12,500, whichever is less. Such 60 per cent $12,500 guaranty is available only on loans to finance the purchase or construction of a dwelling or farm residence (or to finance repairs, alterations or improvements thereto) which the veteran will occupy personally as his home.

B. Eliminated, in respect to home loans, the requirement that the purchase price or cost of construction, repairs or alterations of a dwelling or farm residence may not exceed the reasonable value thereof as determined by the Veterans Administration. In lieu of such requirement Congress substituted a provision that (A) after making its reasonable value determination, the VA shall, as soon as possible thereafter, notify the veteran concerned of such determination, and (B) the amount of the loan to finance the purchase, construction, repairs or alterations to a dwelling or farm residency may not exceed the reasonable value thereof as determined by the VA. Thus, it is no longer necessary in a home loan case that a seller, builder, or contractor and the veteran agree on a price or cost which is not in excess of the reasonable value determined by the VA. However, the lender making a guaranteed home loan to the veteran must limit the loan to an amount which is not in excess of VA's reasonable value determination. The sole exception to this rule is that the funding fee payable to the VA in the case of a Post-Korean veteran (one-half of one per cent of the loan) may be included in the loan amount even though such inclusion will cause the loan amount to exceed VA's reasonable value determination. The reasonable value requirement continues to be fully applicable as a limitation on purchase price or cost in business and farm real estate (non-residence) transactions. In respect to these transactions the maximum guaranty continues to be 50 per cent of the loan amount, or $4,000, whichever is less. The reasonable value requirement also continues to be applicable in farm or business non-real estate cases and in these cases the maximum guaranty continues to be 50% of the loan amount, or $2,000, whichever is less.

C. Other changes in the governing law will be covered in subsequent bulletins.

2. Effective immediately, the VA will issue guaranty commitments on proposed home loans notwithstanding that the purchase price or cost of the properties exceeds the reasonable value determination provided (A) the amount of the loan does not exceed the reasonable value (except to the extent of the VA funding fee to be included in the loan), (B) the application shows that the veteran has sufficient cash or liquid assets to pay in cash the difference between the purchase price or cost of the property and the loan amount, plus the closing costs properly chargeable to and to be paid by the borrower, and (C) the application is accompanied by the certification of the veteran set forth in Paragraph 3 hereof. Supervised lenders may process such home loans on the automatic guaranty (non-prior approval) basis.

3. VA Form 26-1802A (Application for Home Loan Guaranty or Insurance) and Form 26-1820 (Report of Home Loan Processed on Automatic Basis) received by the Veterans Administration on or after May 7, 1968, must, pending revision of these forms, be accompanied by a certification of the veteran as follows in any case in which the purchase price or cost of the property exceeds the VA reasonable value:

> "I understand that the purchase price or cost of the property financed or to be financed with the proceeds of this loan exceeds its reasonable value as determined by the Veterans Administration. I understand also that this excess of my cost over such reasonable value is required to be paid by me in cash out of my own resources. I certify that such excess has been or will be paid by me in cash at or prior to loan closing and that I do not and will not have outstanding any unpaid obligation contracted in connection with payment of such excess".

NOTE: As the veteran's certificate indicates, the excess of the purchase price or cost of the property over the amount of the reasonable value established by VA must be paid in cash by the veteran from his own resources at or prior to loan closing. This requirement applies only in cases in which the purchase price or cost of the property exceeds the VA reasonable value. In addition, of course, those closing costs which the veteran will pay must also be paid in cash. The certificate which the veteran must sign and which must accompany Form 26-1802A (Application for Home Loan Guaranty or Insurance) and Form 26-1820 (Report of Home Loan Processed on Automatic Basis) precludes the veteran from borrowing any portion of the cash necessary to pay the excess of cost over reasonable value. No change has been made in the processing requirements or certifications relating to home loans in which the purchase price or cost to the veteran does not exceed reasonable value.

4. The Veterans Administration will issue a copy of its certificate of reasonable value direct to the veteran homebuyer in addition to the copy sent to the requestor.

5. With respect to previously issued Certificates of Eligibility which shows $7,500 of home loan guaranty entitlement to be available, lenders may presume that the veterans concerned now have entitlement of $12,500. Smaller balances of available home loan entitlement will be similarly increased. In cases where loans are closed pursuant to Certificates of Commitment issued prior to May 7, 1968 and which provide for a guaranty equal to $7,500 (and also in automatically guaranteed home loan cases supported by a Certificate of Eligibility showing $7,500 guaranty entitlement) VA will issue a guaranty in such percentage as is permissible in view of the increase in guaranty entitlement from $7,500 to $12,500 if the date the loan was closed is on or after May 7, 1968 . For example, where the Certificate of Commitment or the Certificate of Eligibility shows a $7,500 entitlement, the VA will issue a guaranty of $12,500 if the loan is equal to or exceeds $20,833; if, however, the available entitlement was only $6,500, VA will issue a guaranty of $11,500 if the loan equals $19,166 or more.

6. Attached are amendments to the Loan Guaranty Regulations filed in the Federal Register and explanatory comments.

Sincerely yours,

FIERRE NOEL, JR.
Loan Guaranty Officer
Loan Guaranty Division

Attachments: (Amendments to VA Regulations)

Explanation of Amendments to VA Loan Guaranty Regulations

VAR 4302. COMPUTATION OF GUARANTIES OR INSURANCE CREDITS. Subsections (A) and (C) are amended to reflect the new $12,500 maximum home loan guaranty entitlement.

VAR 4311. INTEREST RATES. Subsection (C) contains a minor amendment not related to the new legislation to make it clear that the governing rate of interest on advances, delinquent payments and following default is the contract rate reported to the VA in describing the loan and to negate any possible implication that the current maximum interest rate in effect when the advance is made or the delinquency or default occurs may be collected in these circumstances.

VAR 4312. CHARGES AND FEES. The former subsection (C) has been deleted because it is rendered obsolete by this legislation. Material of no present relevance has been deleted in the first sentence of subsection (D).

VAR 4320. SALE OF SECURITY. In the second sentence of subsection (F) reference to the rate of interest has been keyed specifically to the amended subsection (C) of Regulation 4311 to make clear that the contract interest rate is necessarily applicable.

VAR 4336. ELIGIBILITY OF LOANS; REASONABLE VALUE REQUIREMENTS. This section is extensively revised to reflect in respect to home loans that the VA reasonable value limits only the amount of the loan which may be guaranteed or insured and, in respect to other secured loans, that the VA reasonable value continues to limit the amount the veteran may pay for the property securing the loan. Subsection (B), which was formerly (A), is amplified to reflect the effect of undisclosed superior liens upon the computation of guaranty claims, if, when such lien is taken into account, the sum of the loan amount plus the undisclosed lien exceeds the reasonable value in home loan cases. Added in respect to home loans is a requirement that the veteran certify that he will pay the difference, if any, between cost of the property and reasonable value in cash from his own resources. Also added is a new subsection (C) which is in effect an amendment of the former subsection (B) to conform to the new legislation.

VAR 4354. LAND SALE CONTRACTS. Changes are made to conform to those in Regulation 4336.

Amendments to VA Loan Guaranty Regulations
Filed in the Federal Register , 1968

4302 (§36.4302). COMPUTATION OF GUARANTIES OR INSURANCE CREDITS

(A) For the purpose of computing guaranty in respect to a loan to a veteran, the following maxima cannot be exceeded.

(1) Loans Under 38 U.S.C. 1810. Sixty percent of the original principal amount, or ~~$7,500~~ /12,500/, whichever is less.

(2) through (4) - No change.

(B) - No change.

(C) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (G) of VA Regulation 4303, the following formula shall govern the ascertainment of the amount of the guaranty or insurance entitlement which remains available to an eligible veteran after prior use of entitlement: Add to the amount of such entitlement previously used for realty twice the amount previously used for nonrealty purposes. Subtract this sum from $4,000. The sum remaining is the amount available for the guaranty or insurance of a real-estate loan other than a loan under 38 U.S.C. 1810 and one-half of such sum is available for a non-real-estate loan. For the purpose of ascertaining the amount of guaranty entitlement which remains available for a loan under 38 U.S.C. 1810 after prior use of entitlement, add to the amount of such entitlement previously used for realty twice the amount previously used for nonrealty purposes. Subtract this sum from ~~$7,500~~ /12,500/. The sum remaining is the amount of entitlement available for loans under 38 U.S.C. 1810.

4311. (§36.4311). INTEREST RATES

(A) and (B) - No change.

(C) Interest in excess of the ~~applicable~~ rate /reported by the lender when requesting evidence of guaranty or insurance/ ~~specified in 38 U.S.C. ch. 37~~ shall not be payable on any advance, or in the event of any delinquency or default: Provided, That a late charge not in excess of an amount equal to 4 percent on any installment paid more than 15 days after due date shall not be considered a violation of this limitation.

4312. (§36.4312). CHARGES AND FEES

(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (E) hereof no charge shall be made against, or paid by, the borrower incident to the making of a guaranteed or insured loan other than those expressly permitted under the schedule set forth in subparagraph (D) hereof, and no loan shall be guaranteed or insured unless the lender certifies to the Administrator that it has not imposed and will not impose any charges or fees against the borrower in excess of those permissible under such schedule. Any charge which is proper to make against the borrower under the provisions of this subparagraph may be paid out of the proceeds of the loan: Provided, That if the purpose of the loan is to finance the purchase or construction of residential property the costs of closing the loan, including the pro rata portion of the ground rents, hazard insurance premiums, current year's taxes, and other prepaid items normally involved in financing such transaction may not be included in the loan.

/(B)/ Except as provided in the regulations concerning the guaranty or insurance of loans to veterans, no brokerage or service charge or their equivalent may be charged against the debtor or the proceeds of the loan either initially, periodically, or otherwise.

(~~B~~/C/) Brokerage or other charges shall not be made against the veteran for obtaining any guaranty or insurance under 38 U.S.C. ch. 37, nor shall any premiums for insurance on the life of the borrower be paid out of the proceeds of a loan, except that there may be paid out of the proceeds of a nonrealty loan for farm or business purposes premiums on insurance not in excess of the amount of the loan and for a period not in excess of 2 years, or the term of the loan, whichever is less.

/(B) Except as provided in subsection (A) above no/ loan made for the purchase of property or for construction, alterations, repairs, or improvements thereof, shall be eligible for guaranty or insurance if the purchase price or cost to the veteran exceeds the reasonable value thereof as determined by the Administrator. Notwithstanding that the aggregate of ~~the-purchase-price-or-cost-to-the-veteran,~~ /(1) the loan amount in the case of loans for the purposes specified in subsection (A) above, or (2) the purchase price or cost to the veteran in the case of loans for the purposes specified in this subsection,/ and the amount remaining unpaid on taxes, special assessments, prior mortgage indebtedness, or other obligations of any character secured by enforceable superior liens or a right to such lien existing as of the date the loan is closed exceeds the reasonable value of such property as of said date and that evidence of guaranty or insurance credit is issued in respect thereof, as between the holder and Administrator (for the purpose of computing the claim on the guaranty or insurance and for the purposes of VA Regulation 4320, and all accountings), the indebtedness which is the subject of the guaranty or insurance shall be deemed to have been reduced as of the date of the loan by a sum equal to such excess, less any amounts secured by liens released or paid on the obligations secured by such superior liens or rights by a holder or others without expense to or obligation on the debtor resulting from such payment, or release of lien or right; and all payments made on the loan shall be applied to the indebtedness as so reduced. Nothing in this paragraph affects any right or liability resulting from fraud or willful misrepresentation.

/(C) Whether included in the loan or not the funding fee, if any, required by Regulation 4312(E) shall be disregarded for the purpose of relating the loan amount or of relating cost or purchase price of the property to reasonable value./

4354. LAND SALE CONTRACTS.--~~Loans~~

/(A) Loans to refinance an amount not in excess of the balance owed on an existing land sale contract in respect to a dwelling or farm residence may be guaranteed or insured pursuant to 38 U.S.C. 1810(a): Provided, The loan (exclusive of the amount of the funding fee, if any, required by Regulation 4312(E) which is included in the loan) is not in excess of the current reasonable value of the property as determined by the Administrator and the veteran has certified, in such form as the Administrator may prescribe, that he has paid in cash from his own resources a sum equal to the difference, if any, between the said reasonable value and the unpaid contract balance.

(B) Except as provided in subsection (A) above loans/ to refinance the balance owned by a veteran on an existing land sale contract may be guaranteed or insured,

Provided, That, (a) if the contract was executed within 1 year of the date of application for the loan, the purchase price contained in the terms of the contract shall not be in excess of the current appraised reasonable value of the property; and (b) if the contract was executed more than 1 year prior to the date of the application, the purchase price contained in its terms shall not be in excess of the appraised reasonable value of the property as of the date of the execution of the contract and the unpaid amount of the contract shall not be in excess of the current appraised reasonable value of the property.

Explanation of Changes to Direct Loan Regulations

VAR 4502. USE OF GUARANTY ENTITLEMENT. Subsection (A) is amended to substitute the new $12,500 maximum entitlement for $7,500 in the formula for computing charges against entitlement.

VAR 4503. AMOUNT AND AMORTIZATION. Subsection (A) is amended to substitute $12,500 for $7,500 in the formula for computing maximum loan amount.

VAR 4504. LOAN CLOSING EXPENSES. The former subsection (C) is deleted because it is rendered obsolete by this legislation. The former subsection (D) becomes (C).

VAR 4507. REFUNDING OF OUTSTANDING INDEBTEDNESS. Subsection (D) is changed correspondingly to the amendments in Regulation 4354 to show the formula for computing the maximum loan amount. It is no longer necessary to make the formerly required retroactive determination of reasonable value, even if the land sale contract was executed over a year before date of application. The veteran's certification and cash differential payment requirements are added to conform to the changes in Regulation 4519(A).

VAR 4519. ELIGIBLE PURPOSES AND REASONABLE VALUE REQUIREMENTS. Subsection (A) is amended to relate loan amount only to reasonable value and eliminate the former requirement that purchase price or cost could not exceed the reasonable value. Subsection (A) is also amended to add the cash differential payment and veteran's certification requirements, corresponding to the amendments in Regulation 4336 in respect to guaranteed loans. Former subsection (C) is deleted, since the substance thereof is now covered in subsection (A).

Amendments to VA Direct Loan Regulations

4502 (§36.4502). USE OF GUARANTY ENTITLEMENT

(A) The guaranty entitlement of the veteran obtaining a direct loan which is closed on or after ~~March 3, 1966~~ / May 7, 1968 /, shall be charged with an amount which bears the same ratio to ~~$7,500~~ /12,500/ as the amount of the loan bears to $17,500 or to such increased maximum as the Administrator may from time to time specify for the area in which the loan is made pursuant to section 1811(d) of title 38, United States Code. The charge against the entitlement of a veteran who obtained a direct loan which was closed prior to the aforesaid date, or the date on which an increased maximum is established pursuant to section 1811(d) for the area in which the loan security is located, shall be the amount which would have been charged had the loan been closed subsequent to such date.

(B) - No change.

4503 (§36.4503). AMOUNT AND AMORTIZATION

(A) The original principal amount of any loan made on or after ~~March 3, 1966~~ / May 7, 1968 /, shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to $17,500 (or to such increased maximum as the Administrator may from time to time specify for the area in which the loan is made pursuant to section 1811(d) of title 38, United States Code) as the amount of the guaranty to which the veteran is entitled under 38 U.S.C. 1810 at the time the loan is made bears to ~~$7,500~~ /12,500/. This limitation shall not preclude the making of advances, otherwise proper, subsequent to the making of the loan pursuant to the provisions of VA Regulation 4511. Loans made by the VA shall bear interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum, except where a commitment to make the loan was issued prior to October 3, 1966, in which case the rate of interest shall be that applicable on the date such commitment was issued.

(B) through (D) - No change.

4504 (§36.4504). LOAN CLOSING EXPENSES

(A) and (B) - No change.

~~(C)--Any-commission-or-other-consideration-paid-or payable-by-the-veteran-to-a-sales-broker-or-another,-as-agent of-the-veteran-or-otherwise,-shall-not-be-considered-as acquisition-or-closing-costs-but-shall-be-treated-as-part-of the-purchase-price-for-the-purpose-of-determining-that-the purchase-price-of-the-property-is-not-in-excess-of-the reasonable-value.--No-such-commission-or-consideration-may-be paid-out-of-the-proceeds-of-the-loan.~~

(~~D~~/C/) With respect to a loan to construct, repair, alter, or improve a farm residence or other dwelling, VA may require the veteran to deposit with VA, or in an escrow satisfactory to VA, 10 percent of the estimated cost thereof or such alternative sum, in cash or its equivalent, as VA may determine to be necessary in order to afford adequate assurance that sufficient funds will be available, from the proceeds of the loan or from other sources, to assure completion of the construction, repair, alteration, or improvement in accordance with the plans and specifications upon which VA based its loan commitment.

4507 (§36.4507). REFUNDING OF OUTSTANDING INDEBTEDNESS.

(A) through (C) - No change.

(D) The obligation represents the balance due on /an existing land sale contract: Provided, The loan (exclusive of the amount of the funding fee, if any, required by Regulation 4504(B)(1) which is included in the loan) is not in excess of the current reasonable value of the property as determined by the Administrator and the veteran executes the certification required by Regulation 4519(A); or/ ~~a land sale contract; Provided, That (1) if the contract was executed within 1 year of the date of application for the loan the purchase price contained in the terms of the contract shall not be in excess of the current reasonable value of the property; and (2) if the contract was executed more than 1 year prior to the date of the application the purchase price contained in its terms shall not be in excess of the reasonable value of the property as of the date of the execution of the contract and the unpaid amount of the contract shall not be in excess of the current reasonable value of the property; or~~

(E) - No change.

4519 (§36.4519). ELIGIBLE PURPOSES AND REASONABLE VALUE REQUIREMENTS

(A) A loan may be made only for the purposes hereinafter set forth, and the /loan (exclusive of the amount of the funding fee, if any, required by Regulation 4504(B)(1) which is included in the loan)/ ~~purchase price or cost of the property, construction, repairs, alterations, or improvements to be financed with the loan proceeds~~ may not exceed the reasonable value of the /property/ same as established by VA:

(1) To purchase or construct a dwelling to be owned and occupied by the veteran as a home;

(2) To purchase a farm on which there is a farm residence to be occupied by the veteran as his home;

(3) To construct on land owned by the veteran a farm residence to be occupied by him as his home;

(4) To repair, alter, or improve a farm residence or other dwelling owned by the veteran and occupied by him as his home/:/

/Provided, The veteran certifies, in such form as the Administrator may prescribe, that he has paid in cash from his own resources on account of such purchase, construction, alteration, repair, or improvement a sum equal to the difference, if any, between the purchase price or cost of the property and its reasonable value./

(B) - No change.

SUBJ: Increase in maximum interest rate chargeable on GI loans

1. VA Regulation 4311(A) has been amended, effective May 7, 1968 to permit an interest rate of six and three-fourths percent per annum on GI loans made on or after that date. In respect to loans in process, i.e. loan applications submitted to VA showing an interest rate not in excess of six percent, on some of which commitments are outstanding but the loans have not been closed, the following will apply:

The increased interest rate may be charged on any loan in respect to which the loan application shows an interest rate not in excess of six percent, regardless of whether a certificate of commitment (VA Form 26-1866a) has or has not been issued, unless the charging of the increased rate would involve a breach of a prior commitment by the lender to make the loan to the veteran at a lesser rate. However, in every case in which the increased rate is charged the lender must obtain and submit to the VA with its certificate of disbursement (VA Form 26-1876) a statement executed by the veteran reading as follows:

"I understand and agree that the interest rate on my loan has been raised from six percent to _____percent and that the amount of the monthly payment on my loan for interest and principal will be increased by $_____."

Signed_____

This statement executed by the veteran will be required before the evidence of guaranty will be issued regardless of any prior statements executed by the veteran concerning an increase in interest rate.

2. Loans closed on the automatic (non-prior approval) basis by "Supervised" lenders on or after the effective date of the regulation may also bear interest at the rate of six and three-fourths percent per annum if the charging of such rate does not involve a breach of any prior commitment of the lender to the borrower. In those cases in which the lender, prior to the effective date of the amendment to VA Regulation 4311 (A), had approved the veteran's application for a loan, the statement prescribed in paragraph 1 hereof will be required to be submitted with the loan report (VA Form 26-1820).

SUBJ: RELEASE OF VETERANS FROM LIABILITY TO VA - - ASSUMPTION CLAUSES

1. Under the governing law, a veteran who obtains from a private lender a loan which is guaranteed or insured by the Veterans Administration, is legally obligated to indemnify the United States Government for the net amount of any guaranty or insurance claim the Veterans Administration may thereafter be required to pay to the holder of the loan. This right of indemnity has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, notwithstanding that a deficiency judgment was not obtained or was not obtainable by the mortgage holder under local state law (U.S. v. Shimer (1961) 367 US 374). However, Section 1817, Title 38, U. S. Code, and applicable VA Regulations, provide for the release of a veteran from liability to the Government, when he sells the property securing his guaranteed or insured loan and allows the loan to continue on the property, if the loan is current; the purchaser-transferee is acceptable to the VA from an income and credit standpoint; and the purchaser-transferee assumes the loan and also assumes the above-mentioned indemnity obligation. The same conditions also pertain to the release of veterans from liability on account of direct loans made by the Veterans Administration.

2. It is extremely important that veterans, who find it necessary or expedient to sell their homes without their VA-guaranteed, insured, or direct loans being paid in full, avail themselves of this opportunity to be released by the VA, since those who have not done so have frequently found themselves obligated for the repayment of sizeable amounts in the many cases where their purchasers, or subsequent owners, have defaulted.

3. The proper practice, of course, is for the veteran to include in his sale contract a provision that the purchaser will assume all his loan obligations, including his potential indemnity liability if a guaranteed or insured loan, and that the sale will not be consummated unless and until the VA approves the income and credit of the purchaser. Experience has shown, however, that for various reasons sales are frequently consummated without prior submission of release applications to VA and, in many cases, without the purchaser even assuming the payment of the loan. This makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the veteran to obtain a release from the VA at a later date.

4. It will be appreciated if you will counsel veterans and servicemen, when such opportunities arise, concerning the importance of obtaining release approvals from the Veterans Administration before consummating the sales of their homes securing VA-guaranteed, insured, or direct loans. Where, however, they propose, for any reason, to proceed without such advance approval, we will appreciate your counseling them to include in the deed an assumption clause which will permit us to grant a release, upon the veteran's application subsequent to the conveyance, provided the deed has been recorded, the loan is current, and the purchaser's income and credit are acceptable. Attached is an assumption clause (Exhibit "A") which is acceptable to this office for use in VA-guaranteed and insured loans in the State of Georgia. Exhibit "B" is for use in direct loan cases only involving Georgia properties.

5. The inclusion of the assumption clause will not, of course, assure that a release from the Veterans Administration can be obtained. This will depend upon the deed being recorded, loan being current, and the purchaser's income and credit being acceptable, as above stated. Such inclusion will, however, permit releases in many cases that could not otherwise be approved. Also, the inclusion of the assumption clause will afford the veteran a right against his transferee and, thus, give him some measure of protection, even though VA may decline to release the veteran because the loan is in default or the transferee's income and credit are not acceptable.

6. We look forward to your cooperation and assistance in this matter.

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. Preference will be given to offers providing for largest cash payment and shortest term of repayment. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705 (Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale), on which form all offers must be submitted. This listing cancels all previous listings.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. "VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin."

2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum. - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block. Offers pending - OP.

6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information

8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

10. Offers to Purchase or rent received after February 15, 1968 will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).

11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

1. "VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin."
2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.
3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.
4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.
5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum. - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block. Offers pending - OP.
6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payments and all other pertinent information.
7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.
8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.
9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.
10. Offers to Purchase or rent received after February 15, 1968 will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).
11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.
12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing.

SUBJ: Lock Box Keys To VA Owned Properties

1. All brokers participating in the sale of VA owned properties may obtain lock box keys directly from our office by requesting them in person, or by letter enclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope.

2. The following requirements and procedures must be followed by all brokers, their salesmen or representatives:

a. Brokers may not reproduce keys nor purchase them from any source other than those designated by this office.

b. Keys furnished to brokers shall be returned upon demand by VA.

c. No VA owned property shall be inspected or shown to a prospective purchaser prior to our listing for sale.

d. Under no circumstances will a lock box key be given to a prospective purchaser or any other unauthorized individual and be permitted to enter a property alone. You or your representative must accompany all prospects inside VA properties.

e. Help us to keep our properties clean and presentable. Be sure that the property is secured before you leave (all windows and doors closed and locked), sign the Inspection Record Card and return the door key to the lock box before leaving.

f. Lock boxes and keys are not to be removed from the property before the date of the sales closing, at which time the lock box will be returned to our management broker who will issue a receipt for its return.

3. Strict adherence to these requirements is necessary to protect all brokers participating in our program. Your full cooperation is needed and will be appreciated.

SUBJ: VA Form 26-6705, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale. Inclusion of Reference to Veterans' Active Service and Having Been Awarded the Vietnam Service Medal

1. Top priority will be given veterans who have been awarded the Vietnam Service Medal on purchase offers received in connection with the sale of VA owned properties.

2. The Vietnam Service Medal is awarded to all members of the United States Armed Forces serving in Vietnam and contiguous waters or air space, thereover, after July 3, 1965 and before terminal date, when announced. It is only for those veterans who have been awarded the Vietnam Service Medal that this top priority is available.

3. VA Form 26-6705 (March 1968), Block 9 will be utilized to indicate whether or not the prospective purchaser is a Vietnam Service Medal holder. When applicable, the following will be inserted in Block 9 of the VA Form 26-6705: "I have been awarded the Vietnam Service Medal for active duty in Vietnam." This statement should be initialed by the prospective purchaser.

4. Your cooperation in this matter will be appreciated.

SUBJ: VA Form 26-6705a
"Agreement to Repair and/or Acceptance by the Purchaser"

1. VA Form 26-6705a, "Agreement to Repair and/or Acceptance by the Purchaser", is a new form which must accompany Form 26-6705, "Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale", on each offer submitted where our listed sale price involves repairs to be accomplished by the VA. The repair program to be undertaken by the VA will be posted in the property on VA Form 26-6705a by our management broker and our sales listing will contain a reference to the posted repair program, delayed because of title, completion of repairs, etc.

2. The repairs designated by the VA and posted in the property must be reproduced by the selling broker on VA Form 26-6705a and attached to all copies of the Offer Form 26-6705 submitted on a "repaired basis". The signature of the prospective purchaser is required on all copies of Form 26-6705a as an acknowledgement that only those repairs specified thereon are the responsibility of the VA and are included as one of the terms of the Contract of Sale. Offers to purchase on the basis of our listed "as is" price do not require the submission of Forms 26-6705a.

3. The list of repairs (Form 26-6705a) as posted in the property will usually be found on the kitchen counter top, secured by masking tape, and is for the information and benefit of all brokers and their prospects. It is not to be removed and we respectfully request your cooperation. A supply of this new form is enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS W. BODKIN

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing.

L. G. BULLETIN NO. 250

December 23, 1968 YOUR FILE REFERENCE:

IN REPLY REFER TO: 316-261

TO : ALL PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SUBJ : AMENDMENTS TO LOAN GUARANTY REGULATIONS 4350, 4320 (H) (5) and 4515 TITLE LIMITATIONS

1. VA Regulation 4350 (38 CFR 36.4350) has been amended effective December 4, 1968, to incorporate the conditions and title limitations which VA will consider as not materially affecting the value of residential property. Regulation 4350 and 4320(H) (5) have also been amended to provide that the violation of a racial restrictive covenant, even though such restriction may provide for reversion or forfeiture of title because of such violation, will not render title unacceptable to VA. Attached is Exhibit A-the Regulations as amended.

2. Under the governing law (38 USC 1810 (b) (5) as amended by PL 90-301 effective May 7, 1968) the loan amount cannot exceed the reasonable value established by VA.

3. Regulation 4350(A) sets forth the estate in real property to be acquired by the veteran and provides that title shall be such as is acceptable to informed buyers, title companies, and attorneys generally in the community in which the property is located, except as modified by subparagraph (B). Subparagraph (B) lists those title conditions which will not be objectionable provided that, insofar as they materially affect the value of the property, they are taken into account by the VA in establishing reasonable value. A new subparagraph (C) has been added to Regulation 4350 to incorporate the conditions and title limitations, previously listed in Technical Bulletin 26A-6, which VA will consider as not materially affecting the value of residential property.

4. Although Technical Bulletin 26A-6 was issued for the specific purpose of advising lenders of those conditions which VA will consider as not materially affecting the value of the property, lenders nevertheless have continued to request specific assurance on a case basis that a certain condition does not affect value, despite the fact that the condition is listed in the technical bulletin. We understand that these requests are due primarily to the requirements of secondary investors. We believe that to some extent investors are reluctant to rely on the so-called waiver provisions in Technical Bulletin 26A-6 because of doubt as to their binding effect on VA due to their being published in a technical bulletin rather than in the loan guaranty regulations. Therefore VA has incorporated into Regulation 4350(C) the list of conditions and title limitations now contained in the technical bulletin in order to reduce the unnecessary correspondence with which the field offices are presently burdened. It is hoped that in the future lenders and investors will confine their requests for waivers to title limitations other than those listed in Regulation 4350(C). In all such cases, waivers must be requested prior to loan closing and submission of VA Form 26-1876 in prior approval cases or VA Form 26-1820 in cases processed on the automatic basis.

5. The other amendments made to VA Regulation 4350 and 4320 concern racial restrictive covenants which include a provision for reversion or forfeiture of title in the event of violation of the covenant. VA Regulations relating to the breach of covenants which provide for reverter contain no exception as to reverter provisions based on racial restrictive covenants. The violation of such provisions is no longer considered a title defect by lenders, title companies and attorneys generally, particularly since the enactment of Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 and the United States Supreme Court decision in Jones v. Mayer Company. The amendment relating to the effect of reverter or forfeiture clauses in racial restrictive covenants should not be construed as a recission of the existing Regulations concerning racial restrictive covenants created and filed of record after February 15, 1950. The title to property subject to such restrictions remains unacceptable to VA unless the facts warrant an exemption as provided in the Regulations.

Sincerely yours,

J. J. SUMMERFORD
Loan Guaranty Officer
Loan Guaranty Division

Att.
Exhibit A

4350

(B) Any such property or estate will not fail to comply with the requirements of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by reason of the following:

(1) Encroachments;

(2) Easements;

(3) Servitudes;

(4) Reservations for water, timber, or sub-surface rights;

(5) Right in any grantor or cotenant in the chain of title, or a successor of either, to purchase for cash, which right by the terms thereof is exercisable only if---

(a) An owner elects to sell,

(b) The option price is not less than the price at which the then owner is willing to sell to another, and

(c) Exercised within 30 days after notice is mailed by registered mail to the address of optionee last known to the then owner of the then owner's election to sell, stating his price and the identity of the proposed vendee;

(6) Building and use restrictions whether or not enforceable by a reverter clause if there has been no breach of the conditions affording a right to an exercise of the reverter;

[(8)]Any other covenant, condition, restriction, or limitation approved by the Administrator in the particular case. Such approval shall be a condition precedent to the guaranty or insurance of the loan:

Provided, That the limitations on the quantum or quality of the estate or property that are indicated in this subparagraph, insofar as they may materially affect the value of the property for the purpose for which it is used, are taken into account in the appraisal of reasonable value required by 38 U.S.C. ch.37: And provided further, That, as to home loans guaranteed or insured subsequent to February 15, 1950, the title to any such property or estate shall not be acceptable under VA Regulation 4320(H) if it is subject to restrictions against sale or occupancy on the ground of race, color, or creed, which have been created and filed of record subsequent to that date, unless such restrictions are void under applicable State law, or an emplyee designated in VA Regulation 4342 determines in a specific case or cases that the objectives of Executive Order 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing will be achieved if such restrictions are disregarded for the purposes of determining acceptability of title and the lender making the loan in the specific case or cases is advised of such determination in writing prior to loan closing.

(C) The following limitations on the quantum or quality of the estate or property shall be deemed for the purposes of subparagraph (B) to have been taken into account in the appraisal of residential property and determined by the Administrator as not materially affecting the reasonable value of such property:

(1) Building or Use Restrictions

Provided, (a) no violation exists, (b) the proposed use by a veteran does not pressage a violation of a condition affording a right of reverter, and (c) any right of future modification contained in the building or use restrictions is not exercisable, by its own terms, until at least 10 years following the date of the loan.

(2) Violations of Racial and Creed Restrictions

Violations of a restriction based on race, color, creed or national origin, whether or not such restriction provides for reversion or forfeiture of title or a lien for liquidated damages in the event of a breach.

(3) Violations of Building or Use Restrictions of Record

Violations of building or use restrictions of record which have existed for more than 1 year, are not the subject of pending or threatened litigation, and which do not provide for a reversion or termination of title, or condemnation by municipal authorities, or, a lien for liquidated damages which may be superior to the lien of the guaranteed or insured mortgage.

(4) Easements

(a) Easements for public utilities along one or more of the property lines, provided the exercise of the rights thereof do not interfere with the use of any of the buildings or improvements located on the subject property.

(b) Mutual easements for joint driveways located partly on the subject property and partly on adjoining property, provided the agreement is recorded in the public records.

(c) Easements for underground conduits which are in place and which do not extend under any buildings in the subject property.

(5) Encroachments

(a) On the subject property by improvements on the adjoining property where such encroachments do not exceed one foot within the subject boundaries, provided such encroachments do not touch any buildings or interfere with the use or enjoyment of any building or improvement on the subject property.

(b) By hedges or removable fences belonging to subject or adjoining property.

(c) Not exceeding one foot on adjoining property by driveways belonging to subject property, provided there exists a clearance of at least eight feet between the buildings on the subject property and the property line affected by the encroachment.

(6) Variations of Lot Lines

Variations between the length of the subject property lines as shown on the plot plan or other exhibits submitted to VA and as shown by the record or possession lines, provided such variations do not interfere with the current use of any of the improvements on the subject property and do not involve a deficiency of more than 2 percent with respect to the length of the front line or more than 5 percent with respect to the length of any other line.]

(5) Each conveyance or transfer of real property to the Administrator pursuant to this paragraph shall be acceptable if the holder thereby convenants or warrants against the acts of himself and those claiming under him (e.g., by special warranty deed) and if it vests in the Administrator or will entitle him to such title as is or would be acceptable to prudent lending institutions, informed buyers, title companies, and attorneys, generally, in the community in which the property is situated: Provided, That, as to home loans guaranteed or insured subsequent to February 15, 1950, any title which is subject to restrictions against sale or occupancy on the ground of race, color, or creed, which have been created and filed of record subsequent to that date shall not be acceptable under this paragraph, unless such restrictions are void under applicable State law, or an employee designated in VA Regulation 4342 determines in a specific case or cases that the objectives of Executive Order 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing will be achieved if such restrictions are disregarded for the purposes of determining acceptability of title and the lender making the loan in the specific case or cases is advised of such determination in writing prior to loan closing. Any title so acceptable will not be unacceptable to the Administrator by reason of any of the limitations on the quantum or quality of the property or title stated in VA Regulation 4350(B): Provided, That

(a) At the time of the conveyance or transfer to the Administrator there has been no breach of any conditions affording a right to the exercise of any reverter, [except that title will not be unacceptable to the Administrator by reason of a violation of a restriction based on race, color, creed, or national origin, whether or not such restriction provides for reversion or forfeiture of title or a lien for liquidated damages in the event of a breach.]

(b) With respect to any such limitations which came into existence subsequent to the making of the loan, full compliance was had with the requirements of VA Regulation 4324. The acceptability of a conveyance or transfer pursuant to the requirements of this subparagraph will be established by delivery to the Administrator of any of the following evidences of title issued by an institution or person satisfactory to the Administrator, in form satisfactory to him, showing that title to the property of the quality specified in this subparagraph is or will be vested in the Administrator:

1. A title policy insuring the Administrator in an amount approximately equal to the consideration for the property, or a commitment therefor; or

2. A certificate of record title; or

3. An abstract of title accompanied by a legal opinion as to the quality of such title of record; or 4320(H) Con.

4. A Torrens or similar title certificate; or

5. Such other evidence of title as the Administrator may approve.

In lieu of such title evidence, the Administrator will accept a conveyance or transfer with general warranty with respect to the title from a holder described in 38 U.S.C. 1802 (d) or from a holder of financial responsibility satisfactory to the Administrator. In any case where the holder does not deliver evidence of title of the character specified in this subdivision, the holder to aid the Administrator in his determination of acceptability of title shall without expense to the Administrator furnish such evidence of title, including survey, if any, as may have been obtained by the holder incident to the making of the loan or attendant to the foreclosure.

(B) Any such property or estate will not fail to comply with the requirements in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by reason of the following:

(1) Encroachments;

(2) Easements;

(3) Servitudes;

(4) Reservations for water, timber, or subsurface rights;

(5) Right in any grantor or cotenant in the chain of title, or a successor of either, to purchase for cash, which right by the terms thereof is exercisable only if--

(a) An owner elects to sell,

(b) The option price is not less than the price at which the then owner is willing to sell to another, and

(c) Exercised within 30 days after notice is mailed by registered mail to the address of optionee last known to the then owner, of the then owner's election to sell, stating his price and the identity of the proposed vendee.

(6) Building and use restrictions whether or not enforceable by a reverter clause if there has been no breach of the conditions affording a right to an exercise of the reverter.

[(7) Violation of a restriction based on race, color, creed or national origin, whether or not such restriction provides for reversion or forfeiture of title or a lien for liquidated damages in the event of a breach.]

[(8)] Any other covenant, condition, restriction, or limitation approved by VA in the particular case.

The limitations on the quantum or quality of the estate or property that are indicated in this subparagraph, insofar as they may materially affect the value of the property for the purpose for which it is used, shall be taken into account in the appraisal of reasonable value.

SUBJ: Increase in maximum interest rate chargeable on GI Loans

1. VA Regulation 36.4311(A) has been amended, effective January 24, 1969 to permit an interest rate of 7-1/2 per centum per annum on GI loans made on or after that date. In respect to loans in process, i.e., loan applications submitted to VA showing an interest rate not in excess of 6-3/4 percent, on some of which commitments are outstanding but the loans have not been closed, the following will apply:

a. The increased interest rate may be charged on any loan in respect to which the loan application shows an interest rate not in excess of 6-3/4 percent, regardless of whether a Certificate of Commitment (VA Form 26-1866A) has or has not been issued unless the charging of the increased rate would involve a breach of a prior commitment by the lender to make the loan to the veteran at a lesser rate. However, in every case in which the increased rate is charged the lender must obtain and submit to the VA with its Certificate of Disbursement (VA Form 26-1876) a statement executed by the veteran reading as follows:

"I understand and agree that the interest rate on my loan has been raised from 6-3/4 percent to 7-1/2 percent and that the amount of the monthly payment on my loan for interest and principal will be increased by $_____."

Signed_____

This statement executed by the veteran will be required before the evidence of guaranty will be issued regardless of any prior statements executed by the veteran concerning an increase in interest rate.

2. Loans closed on the automatic (non-prior approval) basis by "supervised" lenders on or after the effective date of the regulation may also bear interest at the rate of 7-1/2 per centum per annum if the charging of such rate does not involve a breach of any prior commitment of the lender to the borrower. In those cases in which the lender, prior to the effective date of the amendment to VA Regulation 36.4311(A), had approved the veteran's application for a loan, the statement prescribed in Paragraph 1 hereof will be required to be submitted with the Loan Report (VA Form 26-1820).

3. It is the responsibility of lenders to satisfy themselves that a loan made at the new maximum rate is legally permissible under state law. So far as VA is concerned, the loan will be guaranteed if the interest rate to be charged is not in excess of the new maximum rate, assuming it is otherwise eligible for guaranty.

Sincerely yours,

J. J. SUMMERFORD

1. "VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin."
2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.
3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.
4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.
5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum. - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers pending - OP.
6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.
7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.
8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.
9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.
10. Offers to Purchase or rent will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).
11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.
12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any state of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing. All listing are subject to VA acquiring title.

1. "VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin."
2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.
3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.
4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.
5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum. - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers pending - OP.
6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance. Closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.
7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.
8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.
9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.
10. Offers to Purchase or rent will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).
11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.
12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

TO : ALL PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

SUBJ : NATIONAL HISTORIC PRESERVATION ACT

1. The purpose of this notice is to inform program participants of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966. The purpose of the Act is to preserve, as a living part of community life, those places and areas which have had a significant effect on the historical past of the country and community.

2. The implementation of the Act is the responsibility of the Department of the Interior, National Park Service, which has prepared and published a National Register of Historic Places. Also a Liaison Officer has been designated for each State and Territory. The Liaison Officer for the State of Georgia is Executive Secretary, Georgia Historical Commission, 116 Mitchell Street, S. W., Atlanta, Georgia, 30303. Information concerning Historic Places will be available from the Liaison Officer or this office.

3. VA will screen requests for certificates of reasonable value across data on Historic Places in all proposed home construction, individual as well as committee, cases, and those pertaining to existing properties if any type of remodeling is involved. You can be of real assistance in carrying out the purposes of the Act if, prior to submission to VA, you clear appraisal requests, as necessary, with the Liaison Officer in those cases where there appears to be the possibility that there will be an adverse effect on Historic Places. The Department of the Interior considers that generally an adverse effect will occur under conditions which include but are not limited to:

a. Destruction or alteration of all or part of a property;

b. Isolation from or alteration of its surrounding environment;

c. Introduction of visual, audible, or atmospheric elements that are out of character with the property and its setting.

4. Under the requirements of the Department of the Interior, we are required to report to the Liaison Officer any case where there will be an effect on a Historic Place. If a suitable alternative cannot be reached with the Liaison Officer, we are further required to report the matter to the Advisory Council established under the Act. When any such matter is reported to the Advisory Council, we will suspend the processing of the appraisal request, pending receipt of the comments of the Council.

5. Your cooperation in this matter will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

J. [illegible]. SUMMERFORD

VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

NOTE: The VA hereby lists the above described property with those brokers to whom this listing has been sent. This is not a listing for management or rental of the property, nor does it authorize any Sales Broker to incur charges on behalf of VA. All information hereon is believed to be correct. However, it is subject to variations and VA assumes no liability for errors or omissions. This listing is subject to confirmation, withdrawal, change in price and prior sale by VA, all at any time without notice. It is also subject to the terms and conditions of VA governing the sale of properties and the payment of sales commission; to any statement of facts an accurate survey would show; to existing covenants, easements, conditions, restrictions and agreements affecting the property, insofar as the same may now be in force and effect; to limitations of title or use. Legal description will be furnished upon request. If title has not been acquired or if the redemption period has not expired, sales offers must be conditioned on acquisition, or subject to redemption rights. Issuance of a revised listing automatically cancels any previous listing.

SUBJ : AMENDMENT TO VA REGULATIONS 4320(H) (5), 4350(B) and 4515(C)-RESCISSION OF PROVISIONS RELATING TO RACIAL RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS CREATED AND FILED OF RECORD AFTER FEBRUARY 15, 1950.

1. Those portions of VA Regulations 4320(H) (5), 4350(B) and 4515(C) relating to racial restrictive covenants created and filed of record after February 15, 1950, have been rescinded. The amendments were effective on June 25, 1969, the date of approval.

2. One of the purposes of these provisions was to discourage the placing of such covenants on residential property. This purpose has been essentially achieved by the regulations and by subsequent legislative and judicial developments. As a result of these changes in the regulations titles to residential properties which constitute the security for loans guaranteed or insured by the Veterans Administration and which are tendered to the Veterans Administration following default and liquidation of the loan by foreclosure or conveyance in lieu of foreclosure will no longer be unacceptable because of the existence of such covenants, regardless of the time the covenants were created or recorded.

3. A copy of Regulations 4320(H) (5) and 4350(B) relating to guaranteed and insured loans, as amended to show the deleted material, is attached as Exhibit A.

Sincerely yours,

J. S. SUMMERFORD
Loan Guaranty Officer
Loan Guaranty Division

4320(H) (5) Each conveyance or transfer of real property to the Administrator pursuant to this paragraph shall be acceptable if the holder thereby covenants or warrants against the acts of himself and those claiming under him (e.g., by special warranty deed) and if it vests in the Administrator or will entitle him to such title as is or would be acceptable to prudent lending institutions, informed buyers, title companies, and attorneys, generally, in the community in which the property is situated. Any title so acceptable will not be unacceptable to the Administrator by reason of any of the limitations on the quantum or quality of the property or title stated in VA Regulation 4350(B): Provided, That

(a) No change

(b) No change

4350(B) Any such property or estate will not fail to comply with the requirements of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by reason of the following:

(1) through (8) No change

Provided, That the limitations on the quantum or quality of the estate or property that are indicated in this subparagraph, insofar as they may materially affect the value of the property for the purpose for which it is used, are taken into account in the appraisal of reasonable value required by 38 U. S. C. ch. 37.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. "VA properties are available to qualified buyers or renters without regard to their race, color, creed or national origin."

2. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

3. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

4. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

5. Frame designation Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

6. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

7. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

10. Offers to Purchase or rent will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433 (Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).

11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

8. The best qualified Offer will be accepted from those received within three (3) work days of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. (Work days are Monday through Friday). Be sure to inform your prospective buyers accordingly and acquaint them with the fact that Offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Between equal Offers, time of receipt by the VA will be the controlling factor. Verbal Offers or Offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be entitled to the above priority.

9. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

10. Offers to Purchase or rent will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433(Adoption of VA's policy against Discrimination).

11. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

12. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation Fr. Includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 3 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing.
VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. [redacted] Preference will be given to offers providing for largest cash payment and shortest term of repayment. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale, on which form all offers must be submitted. This listing cancels all previous listings. All listings are subject to VA acquiring title.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as Repaired - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one (1) bath unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation Fr. Includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 3 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing.
VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 3 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing.
VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation-Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum- aluminum; Conc. Blk- concrete block, Offers Pending -OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation -Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum- aluminum; Conc. Blk- concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 3 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation -Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum- aluminum; Conc. Blk- concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum- aluminum; Conc. Blk- concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and exectued VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 8 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum- aluminum; Conc. Blk- concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

SUBJ: Loan Guaranty Legislation - Program Extension - Funding Fee

1. In Public Law 91-506 effective October 23, 1970, Congress terminated the funding fee required by Section 1818(D) of Title 38, USC, on VA guaranteed loans to Post-Korean veterans.

2. There will be outstanding in the hands of such veterans Certificates of Eligibility for loan guaranty benefits which specify that the funding fee is payable. Certain outstanding certificates of loan commitment specify collection of the funding fee. It is important to note that collection of the funding fee will not be required on loans closed on and after October 23, 1970, the effective date of Public Law 91-506, even though the VA commitment of the veteran's Certificate of Eligibility state that it is to be paid. The funding fee must be paid if specified as a requirement on the Certificate of Eligibility and the loan commitment, in respect to loans closed prior to October 23, 1970. The critical date will be that on which the loan is closed whether prior approval or automatic processing is involved.

3. With respect to funding fee remittances received by the VA on and after October 23, 1970 the VA will determine whether or not the fee was properly collectable. In all instances in which it is determined that the funding fee was not payable because of the change in the governing law, the remittance will be returned to the lender. To the extent that the loan amount was increased to cover the funding fee, the returned remittance will be credited to the loan account. This is necessary because disbursement of part of the loan proceeds to pay the funding fee will no longer be a proper loan purpose under VA Regulation 4349. To the extent that the funding fee was paid in cash by the veteran the returned remittance will be disposed of as directed by the veteran.

4. 'Validity dates' on Certificates of Eligibility for loan guaranty benefits will no longer be operative and may be disregarded.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numberals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, aid-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numberals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV - brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, aid-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

PM NO.	ADDRESS	IMPROVEMENTS	LOT SIZE	TAXES	PRICE

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum-aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 3 workdays of the public appearance of the initial or revised listing.
VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum-aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, dryers, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

NAME OF CHIEF, PROPERTY MANAGEMENT SECTION W. A. WALKER	TELEPHONE NO. 526-3474

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale, on which form all offers must be submitted. The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 5 workdays following the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination. This listing cancels all previous listings.

All listings are subject to VA acquiring title. Minimum terms: $200.00 down, balance payable monthly at 7½% interest for terms up to 30 years.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, drying, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The Veterans Administration offers for sale the following properties. Prices quoted are firm and not subject to lower offer. Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice and all transactions are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Contract of Sale, on which form all offers must be submitted. The best qualified offer will be accepted from those received within 5 workdays following the public appearance of the initial or revised listing. VA properties are available to qualified individuals without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin. Offers to purchase will not be accepted where the broker has failed to submit to VA a signed copy of VA Form 26-8433, Adoption of VA's Policy Against Discrimination. This listing cancels all previous listings.

All listings are subject to VA acquiring title. Minimum terms: $200.00 down, balance payable monthly at 7½% interest for terms up to 30 years.

1. VA makes no warranties, expressed or implied, with respect to property sold, whether in its "As Is" or "Repaired" condition.

2. Prices quoted are for properties in their "As Is" condition, unless indicated as "Repaired" - Rep.

3. All lot dimensions are more or less to the nearest foot. All properties have one bath (1) unless otherwise indicated. Numbers shown indicate total rooms and number of bedrooms. Numerals under the property address indicate date VA acquired title.

4. Frame designation - Fr. includes wood, asbestos siding and shingles; BV-brick veneer; Alum - aluminum; Conc. Blk - concrete block, Offers Pending - OP.

5. Monthly payments will include deposit for payment of taxes and insurance, closing cost will include the payment of first year's hazard insurance premium, proration of taxes, deposit to tax and insurance escrow account, interest adjustment, recording fees. Be sure to fully inform your prospective purchaser regarding the total loan payment and all other pertinent information.

6. When properties are purchased "As Is" and the VA has title, the buyer may, after VA approval, be permitted to occupy the premises on a month-to-month rental basis until the sale can be closed. A formal rental contract must be approved by VA in all cases before occupancy. The amount of the monthly rental may be computed by multiplying the selling price by eight tenths (.8%) of one percent rounded to the nearest $5.00. No utility service will be furnished by the VA.

7. Be sure to inform your prospective buyers that offers are subject to credit acceptability, VA list price, downpayment required, etc. Verbal offers or offers not supported by a properly completed and executed VA Form 26-6705 and earnest money deposited with the selling broker will not be acceptable for consideration.

8. Standing equipment such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers, washing machines, drying, air-conditioners, etc., are not warranted by the VA.

9. You may sell to non-veterans as well as veterans. Terms of sale are shown on attached lists.

10. Arrangements for keys may be made at the office of our Management Brokers.

The Negro and His Work

ELI GINZBERG, Director

Conservation of Human Resources
Columbia University

I WANT TO DO THREE THINGS THIS AFTERNOON. I want to begin by raising some questions: How does one think about minorities in the labor market? In this country we tend to assume that many complicated questions are simple. I do not think that conceptual clarification about minorities comes easily.

Next I want to identify, and briefly discuss, a selected number of problem areas which involve the Negro and his work.

And finally I want to present a series of policy recommendations aimed at reducing discrimination against the Negro in employment.

I

To my first assignment: How should one think about the Negro at work? Only a very venturesome or, perhaps, foolish person would say that there is no issue or that it is simple. But I submit that one could also identify as issues the white Southern farmer and his work; or the Puerto Rican migrant and his work; or the Southern white migrant who has moved to California. In short, while there is no question whatever that the Negro and his work represents a very particular and important problem area, there are other disadvantaged groups in the labor force that could also be singled out for study. More importantly, the analysis and recommendations affecting any one group cannot be carried very far without considering the others.

We usually think, and correctly so, that color is a disability and an overwhelming one at that. But it is not always a disability. At this time a qualified Negro in Washington eligible for a senior government position would have an advantage by virtue of his color. Secondly, I would say that in certain very specialized areas of our society—such as jazz music for example—color is an asset, not a liability. But most important, and not to be overlooked, is the dual market. A substantial number of opportunities available to Negroes exist by virtue of the fact that we have a segregated society. A very high proportion of Negroes who have managed to achieve prominence and wealth have done so as a result of the existence of a segregated society.

I asked a Negro friend of mine from Tennessee recently, "What are the remaining racial problems in Nashville?"

And he said, "Well, as you know, we now have Negroes on the city council, but pretty soon we will have to make a choice as to whether we want desegregated housing or political representation. We cannot have both."

I just mention this to underline the reality of the dual market. One thing is sure: it will not remain static.

There is another reason for mentioning these exceptions. When you deal with a minority population there are bound to be a fair number of exceptions. When you deal with smaller minorities you do not need so many exceptions before a good part of the problems of discrimination may get resolved via the exceptional route rather than the normal route.

That is true of religious minorities. If their numbers are small enough, as in the case of five or six million Jews, they do not have to be represented in all parts of the economy. There are not enough of them to go around, so that if they have reasonable opportunity in certain sectors, this is sufficient. With twenty million it is more difficult.

Even more important is this point: you cannot think about twenty million Negroes as a homogeneous group. They differ significantly, in terms of where they are living and working; Seattle is quite different from Mobile.

You cannot generalize about a group whose members include many with only four years of schooling and some who have their Ph.D.

You cannot sensibly talk in the same breath about a casual laborer and a senior government official, even if both are Negroes.

I suggest that substantial differences exist among Negroes about how they think about themselves and about the white community. I recall Miss Lucy, who was denied admission to the University of Alabama. Her parents' view on how young Negroes should behave in our society was vastly different from her view. Because of these and many other differences one must be very cautious before one generalizes. In fact, I do not think that one can go much beyond saying that color represents, to varying degrees, a discriminatory factor. It may or may not be compensated for by a whole series of other factors depending upon parental wealth, education, skill, age, and opportunity.

I talked to a friend whose brother-in-law is a Negro physician on one of the best hospital staffs in Los Angeles. He lives in one of the best suburbs. His children go to an excellent school. He is a very high earner. The discrimination against him has been reduced to the fact that he cannot play golf at Las Vegas over the week end; he can play only on the Los Angeles courses. So on Monday morning he feels a little bit discriminated against because he did not have the same opportunities as his white colleagues over the week end.

This is important because I think California provides an advanced view of what the United States is going to look like in the future; it remains the frontier. The example that I have just cited underlines that much is changing very fast and one must be careful not to get caught in one's own analytical stereotypes.

II

I have no intention of dealing this afternoon with the problems of members of the subcabinet who cannot be admitted to the Metropolitan Club. They have problems, and the country has problems by virtue of the discrimination to which they are exposed; but their problem falls outside my present concern. Nor am I concerned about the successful professional Negro in Washington—the Negro physician or lawyer whose practice is limited primarily to members of his own group. That is a serious problem for him and for the white community, but it is not my interest today.

I will deal with different people—with the native born Washingtonian Negro who is a high school graduate; with the migrant from the South, from an urban or rural background, who has relocated here. There are many others with whom I cannot deal because their problems are distinctive.

The more segregation begins to give way, the greater the need to specify the Negro groups that are being analyzed: Which groups? Living where? With what attributes? Facing what kinds of white communities?

I will deal with the employment problems of the noncollege Negro population in the civilian labor market. I want to leave the question of government employment aside because that is a largely different problem that has to be thought through in its own terms, or largely in its own terms.

I would be the first person to admit that the several sectors of our national life impinge upon one another. Newspaper reports of events in Mississippi have much to do with the way in which Congressmen and even ordinary people behave in Washington. Nevertheless there is quite a difference between the civilian labor market in the Washington area and the Federal government, which is a very special institution.

I will concentrate more on the younger people than the older people, simply because as an economist I am interested in their longer future, their greater chances of being affected by changes currently under way, and because they themselves are more likely to change.

Civilian employment in this large metropolitan area is still tremendously discriminatory against Negroes in almost every desirable sector. This is true for the better service jobs, for the better jobs in trade, for almost all jobs in the clerical area, for the skilled trades, and for almost all jobs at the managerial level.

You are in a community that, from my view, has hardly begun to move. It represents as backward a community as any that I know in the northern part of the United States. Of course, Washington may not be in the northern part of the United States and that is one of its major problems! It is a Northern city with a Southern atmosphere under Southern control. It looks to me like a Southern city in which the Federal government is located but there is little organic relation between the local community and the national government.

I am impressed with the fact that while there has been some progress on the civilian employment front in recent years, it is primarily token progress. If you extrapolated present trends most of the young people waiting for opportunities would be dead before the opportunities opened up.

The attitudes of the white community, representing primarily Southern attitudes, constitute one of the major problems that Washington faces. It might not be incorrect to postulate that Washington is more Southern than Atlanta. To the extent that diversified manufacturing helps to break down segregation, Washington has been immune to such influence.

I am impressed with the fact that the Southern Congressmen still control the key Congressional committees that affect the legislation under which the City of Washington operates. This, of course, reinforces the Southern trend.

Just as a piece of history that underscores how pervasive the Southern influence has been in the past: When Woodrow Wilson became President, Washington moved backwards in the question of race relationships; Jim Crow was intensified under President Wilson and discrimination in the Civil Service was intensified. Even a Southerner who came to Washington via New Jersey was still a Southerner.

One has to remember that Washington is bordered on the one hand by Virginia and on the other by Maryland. While both Maryland and Virginia are making a little progress in racial matters, they are hardly what might be called "emancipated states." The influence of the larger metropolitan area on Washington, and of Washington on the area, further tends to solidify the status quo rather than to modify it.

Furthermore, when you have a big relocation of the white population from the center of Washington out to the suburbs, a tremendous number of the better jobs go along; that is, many of the trading jobs go out to the suburbs. Moreover, a considerable number of scientific and research firms are locating in the suburbs. There is an intimate connection between the concentration of Negro population and their employment opportunities. The fact that the white population runs away to the suburbs means that the Negro suffers twice. Not only is he forced to live in a ghetto, which has many negative implications for his development; but many of the jobs previously accessible to him, technically at least, by virtue of the fact that the jobs were within the city, are removed to the suburbs. In Detroit, somewhat the same thing has happened as in Washington.

A large number of Negroes have entered Washington from the seriously deprived areas of the South. Even if they were white, these migrants would have many difficulties though not as many as the Negroes. The newcomers have poor education and little orientation to urban life. These limitations greatly intensify their problem of adjustment.

Do not minimize the question of color but do not ascribe to color all the difficulties that you see.

The development of Negro ghettos in the large metropolitan centers, of which Washington is an outstanding example, is a tremendous deterrent to effective adjustment to urban life. It means that the handicapped have to rely upon others who are handicapped for help. That is very rough on the newcomer.

One of the important contributions of desegregated schools and communities is that they provide models of people who have moved a rung or two up the ladder. But if the newcomer has no model or if the models that he has are very limited, it intensifies his problem tremendously. This helps to explain why the Supreme Court in its 1954 decision held that segregated schools are inherently unequal.

Moving to a city intensifies previously existing weaknesses. It is no secret that the Negro family structure has been very much less stable, very much more subject to being unsettled through desertion, separation, divorce, than that of the white family. Many more Negro than white children grow up in broken homes! Migration places an additional burden on family structure. Dr. Hylan Lewis' research investigation in this community has thrown a powerful searchlight on the relation between family structure and social and economic maladjustment.

Family instability is not, of course, limited to Negroes. We have a tremendous number of broken white families. But with a weak family structure to start with and with the additional strains of relocation, the problem of neglected and deprived children among the Negroes is reaching startling proportions.

Were it not for the human tragedy involved, I would say that the North deserves what it is getting. In my opinion, the North washed its hands of any interest and concern for the minority problem in the South. To date, the nation has failed to pass any kind of sensible legislation extending special assistance, educational or other, to the South to help it meet the major problems that it faces. What really happened is that the problems that were formerly locked up in the South are now being distributed throughout the whole of the nation. Shortly after the end of the Civil War the North walked away from any real concern with the Negro problem which was for so long largely a Southern problem. And the North has remained disinterested.

Finally I want to touch briefly on the low educational goals and low occupational aspirations of many young Negroes. These shortcomings are the inevitable consequence of their backgrounds and what they see when they arrive. Young people are unlikely to aspire to improve themselves in an environment which is characterized by segregation and discrimination and where barriers are more prevalent than opportunities.

III

With respect to action I do not believe in single answers to complex social problems. From my view of social, economic, and race relations problems, one must use any and all approaches that on balance have a possibility of yielding a net advantage.

We saw a major effort made in World War II for expanding minority employment through FEPC. We have seen the Supreme Court take the leadership on desegregation of the schools. We now see a major effort on voting. All of these, and many more tangents, must be exploited because the relationships of groups to each other economically, socially, educationally, politically require very large-scale transformations that cannot be secured through the application of any single technique.

In Washington, I would use any and all methods that are legal to get the job opportunities burst open! I am in favor of pressure, more pressure, and still more pressure. My advice is: anything that is legal should be tried. I would use economic boycotts. I would use political power. I would use, above all, disclosure and embarrassment.

I know of no way of moving against a recalcitrant situation except that of using all power that exists to break the roadblocks to civic and legal equality. Move on every possible front!

I am disenchanted with the notion of taking it easy and letting time do the job. I have never seen time alone accomplish much that has been worthwhile. Time needs a helping hand.

I would definitely move to educate the white leadership. I would try to explain very simply that when people are not hired or are not enabled to earn a decent wage, this will be reflected in lower profits for local industry.

I would try to make explicit the close connections that exist between lack of employment opportunities and crime in this community. If people have jobs they are less likely to get into trouble, and therefore the community will be able to spend less for its police and rehabilitation services.

Most important, I would try to impress on this community that since our country is now engaged in the most serious struggle for survival, it is insane to tolerate conditions in the capital of this nation which make a mockery of our ideals. I would say that if the job market is blasted open, Negro parents will have more money and they will therefore be able to bring up their children better. There will be fewer desertions. More people will be able to live decently. More young people will develop aspirations to make something of themselves and they will have a chance to realize these aspirations.

That is the first and most important challenge that you face. You should make use of literally any and all devices that exist, as well as others that you are imaginative enough to develop, to press within the law for the opening of all jobs to people who are qualified to work.

The second area is more complicated. It involves the schools. I believe that we in the United States are facing a much more serious problem with adolescents than most people realize. It results from elongating secondary schooling without considering its impact. It is my firm belief that the high school is a limited rather than a general instrument; that the high school can offer something of value to the overwhelming number of youngsters up to the age of 16; although if you push me into a corner, I am not even certain of that; it may be only up to 15.

For the 16 to 18 age group I am convinced that the high school, as presently constituted even with allowances for recent efforts to alter it, is unable to offer a meaningful curriculum for approximately 25 per cent of the pupil population. High schools have become detention pens because the community has been too uninterested, too unimaginative, too lazy to figure out alternative developmental experiences for youngsters who cannot profit by the currently constituted high school curriculum.

In my opinion it is exceedingly important for Washington, New York, Chicago, Detroit, as well as smaller communities, to dust away the cobwebs in their educational planning and to establish meaningful work-school programs which would make it possible for many youngsters who are physically and emotionally developed to begin to work at the age of 16, to be associated with adults, to earn some money, and to develop some serious goals in life. We are denying essential developmental experiences to a considerable part of our adolescents because we have not faced up to the fact that we simply are unable to find the answer through indefinite elongation of schooling.

The third problem has to do with what might, for shorthand, be called adjustment programs—remedial programs, rehabilitation programs, more generally, welfare programs. But my focus is broader than what is conventionally subsumed under welfare.

I believe that the welfare structure in the United States is somewhat out-of-balance with reality. I know how it got that way. My first studies in human resources dealt with the unemployed in New York City in the late 1930's. I know that it was very important to establish the right of every American citizen to governmental support when he was willing and able to work but could find no work.

I submit, however, that the way in which relief is currently handled—by handing out checks—is an inadequate and unsatisfactory method of dealing with people who need additional help to become self-supporting.

I see no reason why we should not restudy the relief structure and establish conditions which would tie the granting of relief to medical rehabilitation, educational rehabilitation, skill acquisition.

Under unemployment insurance we say that a man has to be available for work. The community should insist that people on relief who suffer from major handicaps which prevent their employment must undergo rehabilitation. Since I have fundamental faith in people and believe that most people would prefer to work, I do not think of this as a punitive approach but simply as a more imaginative attack on the problem of dependency. There is no doubt in my mind that there are in Washington as elsewhere a large number of people who will not become effective members of the labor force even if the job market is opened up, unless they undergo various types of rehabilitation—educational, medical, or other. They are simply too handicapped at the moment to get and hold a job.

This is true not only of Negroes: it is also true of many poor whites who have come North and who do not possess the minimum qualifications for work.

I also believe that it is inherent in such a broadened view of welfare not only to provide for the counseling of applicants but also to offer them the specialized assistance of a job placement system. Let us stop kidding! To force people to be rehabilitated, and then not to have jobs available for them at the end of their rehabilitation, is a double indignity.

In sum: the most important thing for you to do is to bring whatever pressures you can to open up jobs across the board. Make sure that you do not settle for what I consider to be a major danger in many of these efforts, and that is token advances, whereby one or two Negroes would get jobs in a previously barred sector and then nothing further happens for the next five years.

This is a city, after all, where Negroes constitute the majority of the population. The kinds of action involving slow but steady gains which might have meaning where Negroes are a small minority have no meaning whatsoever in a community with this distribution of population.

Next I strongly recommend that you re-examine the secondary school system and try to bring the trade unions and the employer groups into a remodeling effort. The educators cannot do this job alone. New programs are needed for young people who are not bookish—but not being bookish does not mean that they are bad. Most of the people that I know in the world are not bookish!

I submit, therefore, that we should make a distinction between the scholar and the nonscholar, and realize that the latter group requires other developmental opportunities than the schools can provide. Above all, they need work.

Thirdly, I want to see a broadening and a deepening of the social welfare structure, to move from welfare conventionally defined as maintenance grants, to welfare defined as a dynamic instrument of rehabilitation and re-employability.

I do not think that there is any single effort more important for opening opportunities to minority groups than the question of jobs, because with jobs comes income and with income comes hope and with hope comes the prospect of developing the potential of the next generation. While I do not like to claim too much for economics, I think that in questions of race, job opportunity is basic. I believe that you in Washington have a challenge you dare not shirk, to make real the promise of American democracy, by establishing equal opportunity for work for all.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Following Dr. Ginzberg's presentation a question and answer period ensued. Several of the questions and answers are summarized here.

What is the role of research in this field, and its relationship to action?

Dr. Ginzberg replied that while we are not fully utilizing the findings we already have, it is important to continue examining the situation anew. The only way we can insure that we are dealing with real problems, with tomorrow's problems—not yesterday's problems, is to invest a reasonable amount of time and effort in learning what is going on. We can all get stuck in our own stereotypes.

We know entirely too little, for example, about the differentiations within the Negro community. What differences exist among urban Negroes, first generation, second generation, and recent in-migrants? We are not dealing with a homogeneous situation at all.

What of the importance of housing and its relationship to employment?

Dr. Ginzberg felt that it is indeed a crucial factor. If the Negro feels that he is locked in a ghetto from which he can never escape, it affects his whole outlook. If he can see the possibility of moving up the social and economic ladder, as have earlier immigrant groups, it would give him much more incentive.

You have mentioned the "token" employment of Negroes. Have you any suggestions for overcoming it?

Dr. Ginzberg replied that for one thing the agencies concerned with combatting discrimination must be adequately financed and staffed so that it is possible for them to keep in touch with employers and prospective employees.We must continue to collect more adequate information about what is happening and be prepared to move faster. Employers must learn to appreciate that it is easier for them to change than to stand pat. The problem is to change the balance of benefits and costs sufficiently that the benefits from segregation become so small that people are ready to abandon it.

Why do we not have more success stories in our arsenal? If there is a movement to employ the handicapped, it is sold with success stories. Why do those who employ Negroes feel they have to talk so quietly about it?

Dr. Ginzberg felt that this is a transitional problem. Employers do not want to appear to be too far out of line and some who are opening jobs to Negroes are fearful of being embarrassed. More attention should be paid to cases where employers are not doing enough.

The Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies is a nonprofit research and educational institution. Its continuing program embraces studies of urban and metropolitan problems, and related educational activities conducted in cooperation with universities of the Washington area. While not limited to Washington, the Center's program gives emphasis to the particular problems being encountered here, and many of its studies are motivated by the research opportunities found here. The Center's current program embraces metropolitan government, city and regional planning, human resources, area economic studies, and a university development program.

INTRODUCTION

THIS IS A REPORT ABOUT THE POPULATION OF METROPOLITAN WASHINGTON. It attempts to identify basic facts about size, distribution, characteristics and trends. The report is intended as a source of information for those agencies and individuals throughout the metropolitan area who will have a hand in shaping its future.

The report attempts its task chiefly by making comparisons of two kinds. First, it compares Washington with selected metropolitan areas throughout the United States to indicate how the National Capital area stands in relationship to others. Second, it compares the Washington of today with itself in the past in order to indicate both the directions and dimensions of change.

This is not a document based upon research especially performed for its purposes. Rather, it pulls together existing factual data, mainly from the U.S. Census, and attempts to focus them on specific questions with practical implications.

A number of agencies and individuals provided helpful assistance in the course of the report's preparation. These included: Edward B. Olds, Health and Welfare Council of the National Capital Area; Rosanna Morris, Arlington County Office of Planning; Leonore R. Siegelman, National Capital Planning Commission; Gordon Kennedy, Jr., Metropolitan Washington Board of Trade; Albert Mindlin, D. C. Department of General Administration; Jerome P. Pickard, Urban Land Institute; Elisabeth Nagy, D. C. Department of Public Health; and I. M. Labovitz, Library of Congress. We are deeply grateful for their assistance. Responsibility for the presentation of facts and their interpretation, of course, rests solely with the author.

Size of the Population

Metropolitan Washington is now the tenth most populous standard metropolitan statistical area (SMSA) in the United States. The District of Columbia is the nation's ninth largest city. In 1960 the city had a total population numbering about 764,000 persons, while its metropolitan area contained slightly over two million.

The three metropolitan areas closest in size to Washington are Baltimore, Cleveland, and St. Louis. All others differ from metropolitan Washington by well over 300,000 persons. (See Appendix, Table 1, for the populations of the 15 largest cities and their metropolitan areas.)

"Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area" is a concept devised by the U. S. Bureau of the Census to treat as a unit the entire population in and around a central city whose activities form an integrated social and economic system. The Washington SMSA includes the District of Columbia; Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in Maryland; and the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church and Arlington and Fairfax Counties in Virginia.

Rate of Growth: The Metropolitan Area

Metropolitan Washington's population today is more than one-third larger than ten years ago, and more than double its 1940 size. Among the metropolitan areas centering on the nation's fifteen largest cities, this area ranks fourth in rate of growth during the past ten years, and third over the past two decades. No other major metropolis in the east or midwest approaches it in rapidity of expansion. Figure 1 shows how metropolitan Washington stands among the metropolitan areas of America's 15 largest cities in rate of growth since 1940.

Unlike other metropolitan areas, whose expansion is closely related to their regions' economic health, the growth of metropolitan Washington depends chiefly on the presence or absence of crises in the nation or the world. Washington grows fastest in periods of national and international crisis, and not necessarily in periods of economic prosperity.

Over the past 60 years its growth rate has been highly irregular. Population increase was relatively great during the two World Wars and during the depression of the 1930's, and slower during the comparatively placid and prosperous periods of 1900 to 1910 and 1920 to 1930. During the decade of the 1950's, the growth rate declined somewhat from the preceding ten years but was still higher than at

Numerical Growth of Population 1900 to 1960 District of Columbia and Its Metropolitan Area

Rate of Growth: The District of Columbia

While the metropolitan area has been growing rapidly in recent decades, the District of Columbia has not.

Figure 2 shows the trend in population for the District of Columbia and its metropolitan area from 1900 to 1960. Until 1930 the two growth curves roughly paralleled each other. The District continued to grow until 1950, but at a somewhat slower pace than the metropolitan area. Between 1950 and 1960, the city declined in population about five per cent, while the area as a whole continued to expand rapidly.

Like Washington, a number of central cities have shown an absolute numerical decline in population during the past decade. Of the top fifteen cities, ten lost population between 1950 and 1960, as shown in Figure 3. None of the five which gained were in the east.

All the factors which have caused these declines within most large cities are not clear. Expansion of commercial and industrial use in the downtown areas may have played a role. Reduction in overcrowding and changes in the characteristics of central city populations probably have been more important. These characteristics will be discussed in a later section.

Changing Distribution of Metropolitan Washington's Population

(The areas within the circles are proportional to the changing size of the population.)

The Urban-Suburban Balance

Until the past decade, the majority of metropolitan Washington's population lived within the boundaries of the District of Columbia. Now dominance has shifted to the suburbs.

As recently as 1930, almost three out of every four residents of the area (72 per cent) resided within the city. The remainder were scattered throughout the Maryland and Virginia suburbs. This was essentially the same distribution which had existed in 1900.

By 1950, however, a full-scale shift in the balance of population from city to suburbs was in process, with nearly half of all area residents living outside the District of Columbia. Today the District has only 38 per cent of the area's total population. The Maryland suburbs have nearly as many—almost 35 per cent. The Virginia suburbs are coming up rapidly with 27 per cent of the total. See Figure 4.

This changing distribution of population quite obviously reflects recent large increases in the number of persons living in the jurisdictions outside the District. But it has been helped along by the recent slight decline in the population of the District. (A detailed comparison of the changing distribution between major jurisdictions from 1900 to 1960 will be found in Appendix Table 3.)

metropolitan area's population will continue to decline in coming years, even should it recoup its numerical losses of the past decade. The fact that little vacant land remains within the District is a powerful restraining factor upon potential population growth.

The same will probably be true of Arlington County and of the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church, all of which have used up much of their available land area. The bulk of future population growth should occur in those suburban areas which still have substantial undeveloped land—Fairfax County in Virginia, and Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in Maryland.

Metropolitan Washington's changing balance of population is quite typical of major metropolitan areas. Of the 15 largest central cities in the United States, all but two experienced a proportional decline relative to their surrounding areas during the past ten years. The two exceptions were Houston and Dallas, both of which added sizeable amounts of territory to their jurisdictions. (See Appendix Table 4.)

Changes Within the District

Many parts of the District lost population between 1950 and 1960, but some gained. The greatest declines were in the central areas with the oldest housing and closest to the downtown business districts. The increases in population occurred in outlying areas. There was a belt between the central core and the outlying neighborhoods which showed relative stability. See Figure 5.

Some of the losses in central areas resulted from clearance of slum dwellings, and will be recouped at least in part as new residential construction proceeds in the southwest.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE POPULATION

Racial Composition

Metropolitan Washington contains persons from a variety of racial groups. Of the two million people residing within the area, about three-fourths are classified as white. Of the half million classified as nonwhite, all but a tiny percentage are Negro. There is a small Chinese community of about 4,000 persons, and even smaller groups of Japanese, Filipino and American Indian origin.

Change in Population by Census Tracts in District of Columbia 1950 to 1960

The table below gives a breakdown of the major racial groups resident in the metropolitan area. Since so large a percentage of nonwhites in the area are Negro, major stress will be placed upon this group in succeeding sections of this report.

*Less than 0.1 percent.

Almost 85 per cent of the Negroes in the metropolitan area, or 412,000 persons, live within the District of Columbia. There they make up about 54 per cent of the city's total population. The remaining 75,000 Negroes live in the suburbs, comprising only six per cent of the total suburban population.

Of the million and a half whites in the area, only about 23 per cent or about 345,000 persons now live within the District of Columbia. The remaining 1,157,000 whites are scattered throughout suburban Maryland and Virginia.

Among the metropolitan areas centering on the nation's 15 largest cities, only one (metropolitan New Orleans) has a higher percentage of Negroes in its total population. In New Orleans Negroes make up 31 per cent of the metropolitan population, compared to 24 per cent for the Washington area.

The District of Columbia is the only major city which now has a Negro majority. New Orleans is second with 37 per cent, and Baltimore is third with 35 per cent. In addition, among the 15 largest, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland and St. Louis all are more than one-fourth Negro. See Figure 6. (Appendix Table 5 shows the size and proportion of Negro population in the 15 largest cities, their suburbs, and their metropolitan areas.)

Growth of the Metropolitan Area's Negro Population

As a metropolitan area located on the edge of the south, Washington has always had a Negro population substantial both in size and in its proportion of the total. As far back as 1900, there were more than 120,000 Negroes living in the Washington area. This number has increased until today there are more than 487,000 Negroes in metropolitan Washington.

The Negro population has grown in much the same fashion as the remainder of the population, with the rate of growth slowing down during periods of relative national calm and speeding up during periods of national crisis. However, over the past 60 years, non-whites increased on the average at a somewhat slower rate than have whites.

Thus, despite the rise in absolute numbers, the Negro proportion within the population of metropolitan Washington has declined since 1900 in every decade but two. At the turn of the century, Negroes were close to 32 per cent of the total population; today, they make up only 24 per cent of the total. This is a slight increase over the 1950 percentage, but still below the proportions recorded in several previous censuses. (See Appendix Table 6 for percentage increases in total and Negro populations from 1900 to 1960.)

Between 1950 and 1960, the Negro population of metropolitan Washington increased about 44 per cent. This is a smaller proportional growth than occurred in the metropolitan areas of ten of the nation's 15 largest cities. Only the metropolitan areas of Philadelphia, Baltimore, St. Louis and New Orleans had smaller rises in proportion to their 1950 populations. Thus, metropolitan Washington's Negro increase can best be described as relatively modest over the past decade. (Appendix Table 7.)

Changing Racial Patterns Between City and Suburbs

When the metropolitan area is broken down into the District of Columbia and the suburbs, however, there are striking differences in trends over the years. Since the turn of the present century, at least, the suburbs of the District of Columbia have had a steadily declining percentage of Negroes. Since 1920, on the other hand, the District has been more and more heavily occupied by Negroes.

Figure 7 shows the changing percentages of Negroes in the District, in the suburbs, and in the metropolitan area since 1900. Approximately in balance until 1920, the Negro percentages of city and suburbs have been diverging ever since.

Changing Percentage of Negroes, District of Columbia, Suburbs and Entire Metropolitan Area 1900 to 1960

The declining Negro percentage in the suburbs occurred in spite of a substantial increase in the absolute number of Negroes living in suburban areas since 1920. Between 1920 and 1960, the number of Negro residents of the suburbs has more than doubled, rising from 32,000 to 75,000. But the number of whites in the suburbs has grown even more rapidly, and thus has increased their proportion of the whole.

As the table below indicates, the only major suburban jurisdictions in which the nonwhite percentage did not decrease during the past decade were those which were already heavily built up in 1950—Arlington County, Alexandria and Falls Church. But in two of these, the nonwhite proportion declined between 1940 and 1950, when they were building up very rapidly.

*Falls Church included in Fairfax County in 1940.

Until the past decade, also, the increasing nonwhite percentage in the District occurred in spite of numerical growth in the white population. Between 1920 and 1950, the white population of the District increased from 327,000 to 518,000. The decline to 345,000 in the past decade was the first such decrease ever recorded. It left the white population of the District still somewhat larger than it had been in 1920, when whites made up nearly 75 per cent of the city's total population. In the same 40 years, however, the Negro population of the District has risen almost four-fold, from 110,000 to 412,000.

These trends have resulted in a steadily changing distribution of Negro population between city and suburbs, as Figure 8 shows. While the total population has been spreading out to all portions of the metropolitan area, until the city of Washington today contains less than 40 per cent of all area residents, the Negro population is more heavily concentrated within the city than ever before.

Changing Distribution of Metropolitan Washington's Negro Population

The City-Suburban Racial Pattern: 1960

The present distribution of nonwhites throughout the metropolitan area, both city and suburbs, is shown in Figure 9. With only a few exceptions, the most heavily Negro concentrations are located within the District of Columbia. The inner ring of suburbs is almost exclusively white, and the outermost sparsely-settled rural fringe again has substantial Negro representation. Some outlying areas even have a Negro majority.

Perhaps more than any other population characteristic, this pattern marks Washington as more a southern than a northern city. Like Washington, most metropolitan areas both north and south are most heavily Negro at the center. The new suburban areas are almost entirely white. In the north, however, there have never been many Negroes among the agricultural population, and the rural areas surrounding the suburbs are also heavily white. In the south, a much higher proportion of Negroes exist among rural dwellers; thus they show up on the fringes of suburbia. If present patterns continue, these outer tracts will become much more heavily white-occupied as the farms give way to suburban development.

There are a few spotty Negro concentrations within the inner ring

* Under redevelopment of suburbia. Three census tracts* in Prince Georges County, Maryland, three in Arlington County, Virginia, and one in Alexandria, Virginia were 75 per cent or more nonwhite in 1960. Altogether, these seven tracts contained almost 21,000 nonwhites or more than one-quarter of all nonwhites in the Washington suburbs. These suburban concentrations, however, have existed for many decades, and their existence does not mean that new suburban areas have recently been opened to Negro homeseekers.

*A census tract is a small area, having a population usually between 3,000 and 6,000 persons, into which the Bureau of the Census has subdivided metropolitan areas for statistical and local administrative purposes.

Changing Racial Patterns in the District of Columbia

While Negroes between 1950 and 1960 grew in number from 281,000 to 412,000, and in proportion of the city's population from 35 per cent to 54 per cent, this increase was relatively moderate when compared to others among the nation's 15 largest cities.

Figure 10 shows the proportional increase in Negro population for these 15 cities over the past decade. Nine cities exceeded Washington, and two more approximately equalled it. Only three had appreciably smaller proportional growth in their Negro population. Among those which substantially exceeded Washington were Milwaukee (187 per cent increase in Negro population); Dallas (127 per cent); Houston, (72 per cent); Cleveland (70 per cent); and Chicago (65 per cent).

Nonetheless, there have been striking changes during the past ten years in the patterns of race and residence within the District of Columbia. The maps in Figures 11, 12, and 13 show the racial composition of Washington neighborhoods in 1940, 1950, and 1960. In 1940, there were three small areas of Negro concentration—in the northwest around Florida Avenue, in the far northeast across the Anacostia River, and in the neighborhoods along South Capitol Street. Surrounding these areas were neighborhoods of substantial but smaller Negro proportion. The bulk of the city's land area had very small percentages of Negroes.

By 1950, despite some changes, the pattern remained much the same. Negroes were still living in the same areas where they had been concentrated ten years earlier, with only slight expansion outward. This was the case despite the fact that there had been an increase of almost 100,000 Negroes during the preceding decade. This static pattern resulted in an intensification of Negro concentration plus an increase in overcrowding and doubling-up of families.

During the 1950's, however, many more neighborhoods were opened to Negro occupancy. The map for 1960 (Figure 13) shows vast increases in the extent of areas where Negroes are heavily concentrated and now make up 75 per cent or more of the population, as well as substantial expansion where Negroes are now found in smaller but appreciable proportions.

Although the Negro population has grown in many areas, three specific directions of expansion stand out in striking fashion: (1) a broad band extending eastward from North Capitol Street to the Anacostia River, and bounded roughly by East Capitol Street on the south and New York Avenue on the north; (2) the northwest area bounded roughly by Rock Creek Park on the west and North Capitol Street on the east, and extending from Park Road almost to the District-Maryland line; and (3) a narrow band extending in a northeast direction from North Capitol Street to the District-Maryland line and bounded roughly by Michigan Avenue on the west and Rhode Island Avenue on the east.

There has also been consolidation of Negro population within and between these areas, as well as a general increase in concentration in areas of the city where Negroes already existed in considerable numbers in 1940.

Racial Patterns in the District of Columbia: 1960

Although the city of Washington is now almost 55 per cent nonwhite and although large sections of the city have recently been opened up to Negro homeseekers, there is still considerable separation of the races in the District of Columbia. In 1960, about half of all nonwhite residents lived in census tracts where the population was 90 per cent or more nonwhite. These tracts were clustered mainly in the areas of long-time Negro occupancy—the neighborhoods around Florida Avenue and South Capitol Street and in the far northeast across the Anacostia River.

On the other hand, there were also sizeable sections of the District where the population was almost entirely white. Almost half of all white residents of the District of Columbia lived in census tracts where the color composition was 90 per cent or more white. Almost all of these tracts were located in the northwest section of the city, primarily to the west of Rock Creek Park. There were also several tracts in the far southeast which were largely white.

Age Composition

In composition of its population by age groups, metropolitan Washington follows the national pattern fairly closely. Figure 14 compares the age "profiles" for the area as a whole and for the nation. The largest age group in each case is the young children; the smallest the very elderly, 85 years and over. In between, each successive age group tends to be smaller than the next younger. An exception to this rule is the relatively small number of persons between 15 and 29 years, a reflection of low birth rates during the depression of the 1930's and World War II.

Age Profiles in the Suburbs: 1960

Somewhat different pictures emerge, however, when the age structure of metropolitan Washington is analyzed along both geographic and racial lines. See Figure 15. In the suburbs, the age profiles are quite similar for whites and nonwhites. Among both, young children are relatively frequent and elderly persons comparatively infrequent.

Children under 15 make up about a third of each group. By contrast, only 4.5 per cent of suburban whites and 4.2 per cent of suburban nonwhites were 65 years of age or older in 1960. The national average was 9.2 per cent.

Age Profiles in the District of Columbia: 1960

Within the District of Columbia, by contrast, there are very different age structures for the white and nonwhite populations. The number of white children in the District is very small today. In 1960, children under 15 years of age made up only 16 per cent of the District white population; this was just half their proportion in the nation as a whole.

On the other hand, half of all whites were 40 years of age or older, or beyond the usual childbearing years. About 14 per cent of all whites now living in the District are 65 years or older. The largest five-year age segment among whites of either sex is women between the ages of 50 and 54.

Among nonwhites, on the contrary, children predominate to about the same degree as among suburbanites regardless of race. More than one-third of all nonwhites living in the city of Washington in 1960 were less than 15 years old.

Coupled with the sparce child population among whites, this fact accounts in large part for the preponderance of Negro youngsters in the District's public school system. Disproportionate use by whites of private schools clearly is a minor factor. In 1960, the public school population was reported to be about 80 per cent Negro. In the same year, nonwhite children comprised over 70 per cent of all Washington children under the age of 18.

Another indication of the size differential of age groups in the District of Columbia Nonwhites

Suburban Nonwhites

District of Columbia is reflected in the 1960 median ages for the white and nonwhite populations.

A "median age" is that age which divides the population into two equal-sized parts. Half of the population will be younger than the median; the other half will be older. Where there is a high median age, therefore, there will be correspondingly few children. A high median age also means that fewer of the adults are still capable of bearing children.

Washington is not alone in having a white population considerably older on the whole than its nonwhite residents. Within every one of the 15 largest cities in the United States, the whites have a median age several years above that of the nonwhites. This is the case for both males and females. In the city of Baltimore, for example, the median age of white males in 1960 was almost 34 years; for nonwhite males, it was less than 25 years. For white females, the median age was over 36, and for nonwhite females it was also less than 25. In Milwaukee, the median age for white males was about 31 years, and for nonwhite males 20 years; for white females it was a little more than 32 years, but for nonwhite females not quite 21 years. (See Appendix Table 8.)

Like Washington, also, the suburbs surrounding other major cities have a considerably younger white population than their central city, and correspondingly more white children.

Recent Age Changes in the District of Columbia

There have been some striking changes in the size of various age groups in the District of Columbia between 1950 and 1960. Overall, without regard to race, the District's population gained in number of children and of older persons; it lost substantially in the young and middle adult years.

Among the white population, there was a very sharp decrease in young adults during the 1950's. See Figure 16. Young white adults between the ages of 20 and 39 went down from almost 190,000 in 1950 to less than 100,000 in 1960—almost a 50 per cent drop. There were also substantial declines in children under 20 and in adults between 40 and 59. By contrast, there was a slight increase among persons over 60.

The nonwhite population, on the other hand, gained in every age bracket during the decade. By far the greatest increase was in the youngest age group. Nonwhite children under 20 almost doubled in number—from about 88,000 in 1950 to more than 166,000 in 1960.

Population Change by Age Groups in the District of Columbia

There was a much smaller increase in the young adult years from 20 to 39. Here, the nonwhite population grew only 13 per cent, from 113,000 to 128,000. Nonwhites 60 and older increased in number from about 19,000 to about 31,000 in the decade—a relatively large gain proportionally, but not numerically.

While the white population of the District has been growing older, its nonwhite population has been getting younger. These changes have had a sweeping effect on the relative number of whites and nonwhites at various age levels.

In 1950, whites outnumbered nonwhites within each major age group. By 1960, however, there were more than twice as many nonwhites as whites among children under 20. There was a substantial but less overwhelming predominance of nonwhites among young adults. Whites still held a slight edge among persons between 40 and 59. But they outnumbered nonwhites by more than two to one among those over 60.

Changes of this magnitude presage further change for the future, if the present distribution of the races between the city and suburbs continues. The white population within the District of Columbia has largely lost the capacity to reproduce itself. But, if nonwhites remain confined almost entirely within the city as at present, the next two decades will see over 160,000 nonwhites within the District enter the years of 20 to 39 when most childbearing takes place.

Recent Age Changes in the Suburbs

As in the city, the suburbs have experienced dramatic age shifts in the past decade. See Figure 17. The white population, which grew rapidly in size during the period, had a huge increase in proportion of children—making it a much younger population overall today than in 1950. Nonwhites, a far smaller group numerically, increased somewhat in number but maintained approximately the same age balance as a decade earlier.

Population Change by Age Groups in Suburban Washington

In 1950, young white adults in the age bracket 20 to 39 outnumbered children under 20. By 1960, the number of children had more than doubled, from 209,000 to 474,000. They now substantially outnumber their elders in the 20 to 39 group.

Like the children, white adults 40 to 59 more than doubled in number in the suburbs during the decade. Those 60 and over almost doubled.

Proportionally, the smallest gain among suburban whites was in the 20 to 39 bracket. Numerically, the increase in white children under 20 (265,000) almost equalled the increase in all other age groups of the suburban white population combined (288,000).

Today, the 474,000 white children under 20 residing in the suburbs constitute almost one-fourth of the population of the entire metropolitan area, and approximately equal the area's total population before World War I. They also come close to equalling the total number of nonwhites in the metropolitan area. If most of these children remain residents of the metropolitan area as they reach adult status during the coming two decades, further rapid population growth seems assured.

Population Composition by Sex

Metropolitan Washington is characterized by a somewhat higher proportion of females among its total population than is the nation as a whole. Because of their longer life span, females usually predominate numerically. For the United States, the ratio is 97 males to every 100 females. But in the Washington metropolitan area there are only 95 males to every 100 females.

This is an excess female population of almost 52,000 persons. The sex imbalance is a reflection of the large number of clerical jobs available with federal government and the relative absence of industrial employment in the area.

Ratio of Males Per 100 Females 1960

United States	97.1 males
Washington SMSA	95.0
District of Columbia	88.3
Suburban Washington	99.3

Almost all of the excess, however, occurs within the city of Washington itself. In 1960, there were over 47,000 more females than males in the District of Columbia. Both white and nonwhite populations were thus skewed. The excess female population among whites was about 29,000; among nonwhites, there were almost 19,000 extra females.

There are differences between whites and nonwhites, however, in the age brackets at which the sex imbalance occurs. Refer back to Figure 15. For the white population the imbalance is not substantial until age 40; from this age on, women greatly outnumber men. For nonwhites, on the other hand, the years of greatest imbalance are from 20 to 44 years. Between these ages there are almost 11,000 more nonwhite women than men. (See Appendix Table 11.)

These differences are unquestionably related to the proportion of nonwhite families broken by divorce or separation, and the frequency of widowhood among whites. These will be discussed in a subsequent section.

Traditionally, the District of Columbia has always contained more women than men. However, the ratio of males to females among whites has decreased significantly since the beginning of the century —from 94.8 in 1900 to 84.5 in 1960. The nonwhite ratio, on the other hand, has been on the increase. In 1900, there were approximately 80 nonwhite males to every 100 females; today, the ratio is 91.5 males.

Outside the city of Washington, the excess of females is only a slight 4,000. But, again, there are important differences between the white and nonwhite populations of the outlying areas. The white population is closely balanced, with 99 men to every 100 women; the sexes are almost equally matched in every age group until the later years when the higher death rates among males begin taking their toll. These ratios reflect a population made up largely of complete family groups.

Among suburban nonwhites, on the other hand, males greatly

Marital Status by Sex and Race in Washington Metropolitan Area 1960

predominate. There are more than 107 nonwhite men to every 100 nonwhite women, indicating a large surplus of single men. Such ratios are often found among groups heavily engaged in agriculture and in construction work.

Marital Status of the Population

Compared with the United States as a whole, metropolitan Washington has an approximately "normal" distribution with respect to marital status. There are some fewer married people in the metropolitan area than in the nation as a whole; slightly more people who have never been married; and proportionately fewer who are widowed.

There are substantial differences between the District and its suburbs, however, and particularly among the white population. See Figure 18. Suburban whites contain a much higher proportion of married persons than whites in the city. By the same token, within the city the percentages who have never been married, who are widowed, and who are divorced are considerably larger—often twice as great—as the same categories for suburban areas. These differences reflect the lower average age of the suburban white population, plus the greater tendency of unattached young persons to reside in the city.

Less than half the white females in the District today are married, a substantial decline from 1950 when a majority were. Coupled with the high average age of the white population, this fact has profound implications for the ability of whites within the city to maintain their number—implications which will be discussed in a succeeding section.

Among nonwhites, there is less divergence between city and suburbs. The suburbs, however, contain a somewhat higher proportion of nonwhite males who have never married than the city, a fact probably related to the excess male population discussed in a previous section. There are also somewhat smaller percentages of widowed and divorced persons in the suburbs than in the District.

When whites and nonwhites are compared, there are few consistent differences in marital status. However, the percentage of persons who have been separated without the formality of a divorce is substantially higher for nonwhites, in both city and suburban areas. (See Appendix Tables 13 and 14.)

Migration and Fertility as Factors in Population Change

The large changes in population in the District of Columbia and its suburban areas during the past decade are a result of the interaction of two factors. One is migration of persons into and out of the areas. The other is natural increase, or the excess of births over deaths. By analyzing vital statistics in conjunction with census population data, it is possible to determine the relative contribution of each factor.*

The District of Columbia's population declined by about 38,000 persons from 1950 to 1960. But this figure does not indicate the total number of persons who must have left the city during the decade, since there was also natural increase in the resident population. Altogether, over 201,000 babies were born, and less than 85,000 persons died, leaving a natural increase of about 117,000 persons. Had all these persons remained, and had there been no change among other population segments, the District's population would have grown by 117,000. The net decline of 38,000 persons, added to the natural increase of 117,000, means that there must have been a "net out-migration" from the District of about 155,000 persons.

This shift was accompanied by a sharp change in the balance of white and nonwhite population, which again was the result of migration and natural increase in each group. The actual decline in white population during the period amounted to about 172,000 persons. But 40,000 more white babies were also born in the District than whites who died, making a net out-migration of 212,000 whites.

While whites were leaving, nonwhites were entering the District. The nonwhite population increased by about 134,000 persons. Of this amount, about 77,000 was accounted for by an excess of nonwhite births over nonwhite deaths. The remainder, about 57,000 persons, represented the net in-migration of nonwhites to the District of Columbia. Over the decade, the net in-migration of nonwhites to the District averaged 5,700 persons per year or less than 16 per day. This effectively represented almost the entire migration of nonwhites into the entire metropolitan area, since nonwhite population growth in the suburbs was relatively small in number and was due mainly to natural increase.

During the same period, the total population of suburban Washington increased by approximately 575,000. Of this number, about 200,000 represented natural increase, and about 375,000 represented a net in-migration to the suburban areas from the District and elsewhere.

*The analysis of the relative contributions of migration and natural increase is not precise, since it omits certain statistical adjustments for inadequate reporting of vital statistics and other discrepancies. The results will not agree exactly with analyses which take these factors into account. Nonetheless, the errors introduced are believed to be relatively insignificant. A more precise and detailed analysis of migration is now being prepared by Dr. Raymond Clapp, demographic consultant to the National Capital Planning Commission, the National Capital Regional Planning Council, and the Government of the District of Columbia.

Overall, the net in-migration of whites to metropolitan Washington probably totalled about 160,000 persons. This is an average of about 16,000 persons per year, or about 44 persons per day.

Of the total nonwhite increase in the city of Washington, about 57 per cent can be accounted for by an excess of births over deaths. In the suburbs, natural increase accounts for about 35 per cent of the total population growth. In an era of rapid population increase for the nation and the world, both whites and nonwhites have been contributing heavily to the growth of metropolitan Washington through their fertility.

Figure 19 shows the fertility ratios for whites and nonwhites in the District of Columbia and in the suburbs. It presents also the fertility ratios for the total populations of three suburban communities which have experienced unusually rapid overall growth. In addition, it gives the ratios of four largely rural states.

The fertility ratio compares the number of children under five years of age to the number of women aged 15 through 49. It thus relates the number of children recently born to the total number of persons capable of bearing children, since females 15 through 49 encompass virtually the entire childbearing range. It is a better measure of fertility than birth rates, which can be unduly influenced by exceptionally large numbers of persons outside the childbearing years as well as by imbalances in the sex ratio. A fertility ratio of 500 means that there are 500 children under five for every 1,000 females aged 15 through 49 years.

Fertility Ratios 1960 (Children Under 5 per 1000 women 15-49)

As Figure 19 shows, the fertility ratios of District nonwhites and suburban whites are practically the same. Whites in the District have a much lower fertility ratio. This probably reflects the tendency for single persons and childless couples among the white population to locate primarily in the District. On the other hand, families with children, if white, go mainly to the suburbs; if Negro, they remain principally within the District of Columbia.

Suburban nonwhites have a somewhat higher fertility level than suburban whites or District nonwhites. However, the overall fertility ratios of the suburban communities of Wheaton and Rockville are higher still. Both of these communities are heavily white and have experienced exceedingly rapid growth in recent years.

There is a popular belief that nonwhites in urban areas are reproducing at a rate much faster than a comparable white population, and that this fact plays a large role in Negroes' rapid increase within the cities. This belief is not borne out by the population statistics for the Washington metropolitan area. In fact, the overall fertility ratios of half the states in the nation are higher today than that of the District's nonwhite population. Four of these states—two of them almost entirely white and two with large nonwhite populations—are also illustrated for comparison in Figure 19.

THE POLITICS OF THE METROPOLIS*

by

Frederick Gutheim
President, Washington Center For Metropolitan Studies
Washington, D. C.

Planning is of interest to politicians as it influences voting; as it changes the established power structure in executive departments; as it alters the value of land; as it affects taxes and tax rates; as it causes the migration of substantial numbers of people; and as it offers evidence of success or failure in governmental stewardship. Other considerations might be mentioned, but these are sufficient to introduce the subject of the relationship of politics to planning.

Planning must be considered in relation to cities, to metropolitan regions, to larger areas defined by river basins or natural resources. It should also be recognized that planning for central business districts, for suburban communities, for industrial areas, or for transportation, urban redevelopment, housing, or other special purposes--each will present its own special aspects and interests. All, however, must have some relationship to the future, and to intelligent foresight into the future, if we are to consider them planning. And for the purposes of this paper, we should be concerned with comprehensive, multi-purpose planning rather than with more limited programs.

Henry Adams observed that practical politics consists in ignoring the facts. It may consist in more or less successful endeavors to conceal the facts, or to make them appear to mean something else, but I think it is impossible today for practical politics to ignore the facts. Further, it appears to me that more and more politicians are interested in the future, and are willing to put political bets on it, as distinguished from a more shortsighted and immediate concern with the next election, or tomorrow's vote. I might also risk the observation that while politicians are closely attuned to the immediate interests and concerns of their constituents, and reflect these in what they say and do, they are less likely to be fooled into thinking this is the whole story. For one thing, they often hear both sides of the story; for another, they know there will be a day of reckoning. These are some reasons for the growing sympathetic relationship between politics and planning.

* Excerpt from Planning and the Urban Community, Harvey S. Perloff, ed., Carnegie Institute of Technology and University of Pittsburgh Press, 1961, pp. 83-93.

Planners, too, are more interested in politics. Having worked for politicians most of my life, I believe I can say this was not always so. Planners used to think of themselves as designers, makers of plans, creators of the city beautiful. They were employed by city planning commissions organized deliberately in order to set them apart from the presumably corrupting influences of city hall. Their plans often graced the wall, or filled the filing cabinet, but--despite notable exceptions, such as Burnham's Chicago plan--frequently failed to be carried out. These experiences grew to stigmatize the entire planning profession. (Robert Walker, The Planning Function in Urban Government, was the best critic.) They were notably responsible for the almost universal scrapping of planning work at the beginning of the Great Depression--at the very moment when, because of the work relief and public works programs, planning was most needed.

Planners swung the other way. They embraced that awful word "effectuation" with unabashed enthusiasm; they even set up jobs in planning offices for "effectuators." The acid test of a plan was whether it was executed; the criterion of professional success whether a planner "got results." Even politics received the pragmatic definition, "the art of the possible." There was a corresponding and deplorable neglect of those worthy inheritances from the profession of architecture: good drawing, models, careful presentation, well-written and printed reports. Instead, we were adrift in a world of mimeographed and badly written reports, a gush of technical language, public relations, and pseudo-public relations. From this period, I think we are now emerging. There is still a desire to appear practical, but generally planners are sufficiently secure, are now paid enough, and have a strong enough position in the power structure to be more relaxed and more willing to be concerned with their proper job.

The planner in a governmental structure today is well aware of how he can contribute to that work. He has such tools as the capital budget, the master plan of public works, the mandatory review, with which to exercise his influence over current work; and he has increasingly the techniques of public reporting and public relations with which to develop "a third force" of independent political strength based on the facts and on independent professional judgment. In his relation to legislative bodies, to city councils, the planner has also developed a surprising strength. Where he has established what might be termed a consultative relation to such bodies, he has contributed enormously to grounding political "electricity" by relating specific controversial projects to more comprehensive and long-range factors. Where the issues have been closely drawn--and they frequently are--consideration in this broader frame of reference is frequently decisive.

Planners are working for politicians. They are not politicians themselves. This distinction is fundamental because we should not train planners to be politicians, much as they should be trained to understand politics and politicians; and we should not expect planners to be organized as parts of the political process, since their work is more related to that of the executive departments of cities, states, and the national administration.

John M. Gaus, in his Harvard report, The Education of Planners, strikes a very nice balance in dealing with this issue. Gaus maintained that planners should be trained to understand general administration and, especially, such staff services as the budgetary work of government where planning might be expected to make its principal contribution. He suggested that some planners might be educated whose main qualifications might not be in one of the "plan-making" fields such as architecture, landscape design, or engineering. His conclusion, substantially that later reached in Great Britain in the Schuster report, was that the ultimate leadership of a diversified planning team might fall to a planner trained mainly in physical planning or it might not, but that all required skills would have to have some common intellectual preparation, a broad area of mutual understanding, and also a common professional discipline.

One consequence of this philosophy of planning education as it was practiced at Harvard under the administration of G. Holmes Perkins was a substantial increase in the richness of planning studies and school programs. The Harvard "new towns" studies were distinguished mainly by their realism from an economic and governmental point of view. Under Dean Sert this appears to have been lost, and whether the gains in design offset this loss is a moot point. Harvard illustrates better than any other school the struggle to give design its proper place in the planning curriculum. It also offers one of the best opportunities to train planners side by side with architects and landscape designers, to set collaborative design problems, and to encourage a mutual understanding and interdependence which is the foundation for later practice. But has such teamwork actually been realized? It is not my impression that it has. This does not invalidate the theory which Gaus enunciated, and to which Dean Sert gives at least nominal support today. It simply means more hard work must be done before it has meaning in planning education and practice.

My own interest in planning in recent years has been principally in metropolitan regional planning. In this work there is seldom any clear-cut administrative context such as city planning ordinarily has. And the political issues are both more lively and more confused.

If the lack of specific responsibility for land use or other kinds of planning administration tend to diminish some political pressures, the greater breadth of planning and its concern with such factors as population migration, industrial dispersal, interregional highway programs, and the organization of state or federal programs on a metropolitan area basis give the regional planner a more bracing professional climate in which to operate. Most of the city planners, like Paul Opperman, who have moved over from city to metropolitan planning find it a stimulating experience for this reason. In the metropolitan scene, many planners find the "real problems" as defined by the social and economic realities of the metropolitan community, not the abstracted and fragmented problems with which a central city or suburban fragments must deal. Not the least stimulating part of this challenge is the need to create new political forms to deal with metropolitan education, metropolitan health, water, and sewage problems, transportation, and the rest of what might be called the metropolitan agenda. Here the planner joins forces with the political scientist and public administrator in the search for new forms of government.

Among the questions worth discussing in this context is whether it is possible or desirable to undertake metropolitan planning without creating first some framework of metropolitan government. I feel that experience strongly argues that much metropolitan planning can be done prior to the creation of any specific metropolitan government with powers. (I was unsuccessful several years ago in persuading the city of Philadelphia and the Pennsylvania Institute of State and Local Government that this was the case; but perhaps they feel differently now that they have had their premature try in Harrisburg to get metropolitan powers for the city of Philadelphia.) Indeed, metropolitan planning will help to develop an awareness of the need for such governmental structure and to specify more exactly what powers it should have and how it should be related to the other layers of government. Plunging directly into the creation of metropolitan government may even lead, if successful at all, to the neglect of the most promising roles of such new governmental forms. This seems to have been the experience in Toronto, and perhaps in metropolitan Miami. By contrast, and without regard to the racial implications of that decision, the creation of the metropolitan consolidation of Nashville and Davidson County was strongly helped by the work of the planning agency.

It may be assumed, I think, that the metropolitan region has certain characteristic political interests and problems. It is with these that metropolitan planning must deal. I might identify them most readily as the problems of the central city, of the suburban periphery, and of the metropolitan region as an integrated whole.

In the central city the problems arising from metropolitan growth and expansion are those of congestion, as a limited central area must accommodate more and more activities; of change, as industry and much retailing leave for the suburbs and office building activities and more specialized trading find places in the city; and of the movement of people and goods, including mass transportation, expressways, and parking.

In the suburban areas, the problems arise chiefly as the result of growth, and typically are those of a shortage of governmental services; the need for orderly planning and scheduling of new activities and facilities; and overcoming the political fragmentation and arbitrary character of highly specialized residential or industrial communities, and the financial, racial, and other difficulties this imposes.

The metropolitan community as a whole can be dealt with only when some means are found for dealing with its governmental problems. Some of the customary ways this can be done (without regard to their political feasibility) are (1) annexation; (2) the creation of functional authorities; (3) the creation of multi-purpose or general metropolitan authorities; (4) city-county consolidation; and (5) the borough plan of metropolitan government. Short of some form of metropolitan government, progress can be made by various forms of private or public efforts to survey the metropolitan community or to engage in metropolitan regional planning.

Since the monumental study directed by Coleman Woodbury, published five years ago, we have been wary of looking at the superficial evidences of slums and blighted areas as being of themselves metropolitan problems. Instead, we suppose they are evidences of racial migration, industrial location and change, organizational defects, and other underlying factors. This line of thinking is being deepened and broadened by the contemporary group of studies by ACTION, not least by that by Professors Banfield and Grodzins just published. This unconventional argument contends that metropolitan government itself is a reactionary movement.

Yet we must remember that it is with symptoms that people and their political leaders are concerned. Slums and bad housing, poor residential neighborhoods, are where it hurts most. We may be able to persuade them that the proper treatment is of the underlying malady, but I think we can ignore symptoms only at the peril of forfeiting the patient's confidence and faith in our understanding of his difficulty. If our remedies for metropolitan difficulties are to be acceptable, we will have to make sure that they affect the symptoms. And that they do not produce worse symptoms! The cure for downtown congestion is not a deserted city. The remedy for slums in the central city is not embryonic slums in the suburbs. Short-run highway solutions may lead only to worse difficulties.

Even the briefest treatment of this subject cannot neglect to mention the interest of the federal government in metropolitan planning. Initially, and most obviously, this derives from the fact that Title VII of the Housing Act of 1954, amended, provides the main grants in aid for metropolitan planning--poorly as these have been handled. More fundamentally, it arises from the fact that so many federal programs have as their end result the location of post offices or federal buildings in cities; the approval of federally aided programs of roads, airports, hospitals, housing, or urban redevelopment; the impact of federal policies of the regulation of transportation, communication of trade; the underwriting of such urban enterprises as housing.

The federal investment in the metropolitan areas of the United States today is probably well over twenty-five billion dollars. And there is no federal policy for cities and metropolitan areas, no effort to coordinate or direct these federal programs and interests in ways that contribute to the betterment of cities. Examples are abundant of federal agencies that ignore local planning. The policy of the Eisenhower administration, and of the Bureau of the Budget, is to ignore these issues or to pretend that some form of improved federal-state relations may ultimately improve them. The one effort of the Bureau of the Budget to establish a regional office with the avowed purpose of exploring what could be done to coordinate the short-sighted and narrow programs of federal bureaus was abandoned. Under the circumstances, the federal relations to cities and metropolitan areas are not innocuously negative; they are positively divisive and disturbing. Even individual agencies and their programs are hopelessly enmeshed with metropolitan interests as, for example, civil defense. A survey of this situation, what it means, and what should be done about it, deserves a high place on the Congressional agenda.

Let me conclude these rather brief comments by some observations on the planning process itself. Please do not think that my interest in the plan as such and in design problems means that I am unaware of the process theory of decision-making. On the contrary, it is because I believe the plan as a design has an authority of its own that it becomes a powerful factor in the planning process.

You have an excellent illustration of that in Pittsburgh where the Golden Triangle project exercised an influence upon much broader planning long before it was ever realized. The same force operates in plans of a larger significance than this limited measure of redevelopment. So long as a plan represents a valid set of facts and principles; so long as it is accepted as a political agreement; so long as it is an expression of popular determination--it must be reckoned with in the decision-making process. When it loses that authority it is finished as a plan. This conception of planning is one reason I am seldom much concerned with the legal status, or lack of it, of much metropolitan planning. Once you get over the money hurdle, the measure of planning's effectiveness is pretty directly related to how good the plans are rather than to the political strength that enforces them. I think it is easiest to see planning in this sense as comparable to organization or to budgeting--a set of influential guide lines rather than an inflexible document. We can reorganize, change the budget, or change the plan--but only where there is a good reason for doing it. This idea is horrifying to architects, engineers, or other people who look at planning as a kind of contract which, once it is accepted, is not to be changed because it has become the organizing instrument for work.

If we have plans, or perhaps you would prefer to call them planning policies, they also become the subject of political debate. Mayor Lee found this out in New Haven. Candidates were recently running for office in Miami with different conceptions of metropolitan government as their platforms. Cities are now beginning to find themselves in a trading position with suburban communities in the state legislatures.

To sum up, then, metropolitan planning must deal with the political issues of metropolitan growth and expansion and it must find political ways of getting its plans into action--whether these are short of the creation of some form of metropolitan government or actually propose such forms of government. If it deals with anything less than the whole range of metropolitan interests, it will cease to be accepted as metropolitan planning and become something else, as has been the case with private metropolitan planning efforts in Chicago, New York, and some other cities. And at that stage it is neither planning nor politics.

THE POTOMAC PUZZLE IS THERE A REASONABLE SOLUTION?*

by Irving K. Fox

It is time for all of us to consider whether there is a reasonable solution to the Potomac puzzle. It would not be appropriate for me to outline and promote here a particular plan for the Potomac, in part because we do not have the analyses that would be required for an intelligent approach to a solution; in part because what one considers to be best for the Potomac depends upon one's personal estimate of some of the values involved. These are values that are difficult to measure in commonly accepted terms – such as the value of the C and O Canal, clean water versus dirty water, and free streams as opposed to artificial lakes. The problem is most difficult where the values are of an aesthetic nature. Since individual measures of these values will differ, I do not believe it would be of much help for me to advocate my estimates of their worth.

Our concern generally should be with the political process – to help, if we can, to make it as effective as possible. Thus I begin with a fundamental premise. Engineers and economists – the professionals of river basin planning – have a competence superior to ours in calculating the physical and some of the economic consequences of alternative ways of using the Potomac River system. They are no better qualified than you or I to make the value judgments to which I referred a moment ago. Acceptance of this premise is basic to the proper functioning of a democratic society. It is with this in mind that I have chosen two objectives for my presentation. First, I will seek to identify for the Potomac as specifically as possible some of the value judgments that you as citizens taking an active part in the political process will be called upon to render. Second, I will suggest some of the kinds of information and analyses that will be most useful in making these judgments.

In moving toward a solution for the Potomac, we pursue a goal that might be simply stated this way: We seek to bring the supply of certain services the Potomac is capable of providing into balance with the growing demand for such services. By services I refer to municipal and industrial water, waste disposal, recreation in the very broad sense of the word, irrigation, navigation, enhancement of land values through flood control, and production of electric power. Broadly speaking, there are three ways in which we can achieve this balance. One is through what we might call "developmental" activities. Another is through technological change, and a third is through adjustments in demand. These are not mutually exclusive; they may overlap one another.

* This article is based on a talk given by Mr. Fox, Vice President, Resources for the Future, Inc., to the League of Women Voters on February 13, 1962. The views expressed are those of the author and not necessarily of his organization.

Development is implicit in all four plans of the Corps of Engineers. They involve the application of existing technology to increasing the supply of services. This is done primarily by regulating stream flow through the storage of water in large man-made reservoirs.

Technological change is emphasized in Potomac Prospect, the report of the Coordinating Committee for the Potomac River Valley. It anticipates that emerging technology will permit us to treat wastes so thoroughly that dilution water will not be required during normally low flow periods to maintain a clean river and estuary. Further, the effluent could be reused for municipal and industrial purposes. This would eliminate the need for much and possibly all of the storage recommended in the four plans.

Adjustment of demand to supply is included in a number of solutions that have been suggested. Under this approach the flood problem would be met through regulation of flood plain use. Pollution would be controlled through regulatory measures, and land use regulated to minimize sedimentation. Industries would be required to recirculate water to minimize use. Water for domestic and industrial purposes might be priced higher, particularly during low flow periods, to discourage excessive use. This last device warrants some elaboration. Storage is needed because water is demanded when river flows are quite low. Most of the time there is plenty of water to provide all the water we might want. If water use is kept down during low flow periods, less storage is needed. Thus it can be argued that we should initiate a system whereby prices for water would be higher during periods of low stream flow. A low price might be charged for the amount required by an ordinary home but additional amounts would be provided at a much higher price. This would discourage use, reduce storage requirements, and assign a larger share of the costs of storage to those who benefit therefrom.

These are some of the things that can be done to bring supply and demand into balance. Some elements of each of these three approaches are found in the various plans that have been discussed for the Potomac. If you will keep them in mind it will be helpful in considering three possible alternative solutions of the Potomac problem.

One of these I will call the Least Public Expenditure Alternative. Another I will refer to as the Valley Land Preservation and Recreation Enhancement Alternative. The third I will call the Major Storage Alternative. Each of these will be discussed rather briefly. You should realize that the elements of these alternatives can be combined in different ways to come up with new alternatives. Please understand that I am not advocating any one of them. Instead I am trying to promote consideration of the various possibilities.

Let us look at the Least Public Expenditure Alternative first. Here the objective would be to supply the quantities of water economically justified for municipal, industrial and irrigation purposes with a minimum public outlay. The elements of this approach would be something like this:

1. Price water to minimize excessive use during low flow periods in the manner I described earlier.

2. Build over time a limited number of reservoirs to assure the municipal, industrial and irrigation water supplies required during low flow periods. This would not be very much storage.

3. Invest in upstream soil conservation measures only to the extent justified by benefits to land in the immediate vicinity.

4. Dredge the sediment from the estuary only to the extent justified by navigation.

5. Regulate the use of flood plains.

6. Don't try to keep the estuary free of pollution and capable of supporting aquatic life.

7. Load the stream with as much waste as it can absorb without unduly increasing water treatment costs.

The consequences of this alternative would include the following: The outlays from tax collected funds would be low. Water would be available to meet municipal, industrial and agricultural purposes. It would be difficult to demonstrate, I believe, that economic growth would be adversely affected. Relatively little valley land would be inundated and the upstream valleys would still be good recreation areas. Many reaches of the river and the estuary would be so badly polluted that fish would die, boating would not be pleasant, swimming would be dangerous. There would be relatively little additional flat water for recreation. Flood damages would not be reduced or land values enhanced through flood control. I suppose few would advocate this alternative. Although it would minimize public outlays, it does not fit the desires of most people. It might not even maximize net monetary benefits.

Let's turn to the second alternative – the Valley Land Preservation and Recreation Enhancement Alternative. Here the primary goal is to minimize inundation of valley land for various reasons and to preserve and enhance aesthetic values throughout the basin. The elements of the program might be something like this:

1. Initiation of an intensive soil conservation program to minimize stream sedimentation.

2. Dredging the estuary to reduce mud flats, as well as to keep navigation channels open.

3. Maximum treatment of municipal and industrial wastes.

4. Provision of a minimum amount of storage for stream regulation purposes on two assumptions, namely (a) that some means can be found to make waste dilution flows unnecessary and (b) that flood plain use will be regulated to minimize flood damages. One might also price water to discourage excessive use during low flow periods as previously described.

5. Provide a series of artificial recreation lakes with relatively stable water levels to the extent justified by a regional recreation program.

What are the consequences of this approach? The dollar costs could be substantial because treatment of wastes to keep the river and estuary clean might be expensive. Second, the realization of high water quality objectives is dependent upon the availability of water treatment technology now not generally recognized as economically justified. One might consider the distillation of effluent as proposed by the Coordinating Committee, or, as an alternative, carriage of the effluent to the Chesapeake Bay, as suggested by Dr. Abel Wolman. Either of these may or may not be justified. A third consequence is that the recreation and aesthetic values would be maximized, if it proves practicable to keep the water clean. Fourth, the sediment contribution to the estuary would be reduced over time; and fifth, you would have no flood control, nor hydro power.

The third alternative I have called the Major Storage Alternative. Here the objective is to provide a range of services at a minimum dollar cost through construction of multi-purpose facilities, namely reservoirs. The basic elements are:

1. The Soil Conservation Service program as it has been developed for inclusion in the report of the Corps of Engineers.

2. One of the alternatives proposed by the Corps of Engineers – it could be any one of the four.

3. A much higher degree of waste treatment than we have been practising in the past.

We are a little clearer about some of the consequences of this alternative because it has been studied more thoroughly than the other two. The public investment required over time by the SCS and the Corps program would be somewhere between $408 and $506 million. The interest cost on an investment of this size is somewhere between $16 million and $23 million per year. Substantial areas of valley land would be inundated. This could include the C and O Canal and such areas as the Cacapon, but not necessarily, because there are some choices. Some farmlands would be inundated. Water quality would be improved – we are not exactly sure how much. There would be plenty of water during dry periods for municipal, industrial and agricultural purposes. Flood damages would be reduced, and values of some lands now subject to flooding would be enhanced. The inflow of sediment to the estuary would be reduced. The timing of the reduction and the amount will depend upon which of the alternative reservoirs are chosen. River Bend (or Seneca) would have considerable effect upon sediment flows soon; whereas some of the others would have relatively little effect. The SCS program over a period of time is expected to reduce sedimentation by 70 percent.

In considering these alternatives there are several significant points on which all parties, whatever choice they prefer, should be able to agree. First, the availability of water for municipal, industrial, and irrigation purposes is not an issue in the controversy over how to develop the Potomac. Plenty of water can be provided to serve these purposes at relatively modest cost without inundating areas many would like to preserve. This I think is abundantly clear from the various data that have been developed and analyses that have been made.

Second, by far the major proportion of the storage contemplated in the plans of the Corps of Engineers is for flood control and dilution of municipal and industrial effluent. Storage for flood control is in the neighborhood of forty percent of the total storage contemplated in each of the four Corps plans. The relative importance of storage for dilution of effluent and for provision of municipal and industrial water in the Corps plans is illustrated by the following comparison: According to the projections of the Corps, a minimum flow of 1120 cubic feet per second will be required for municipal and industrial water use in the Washington metropolitan area by 1985. This is 260 cubic feet per second more than the record low flow at Little Falls. However, according to the Corps projections, 3680 cubic feet per second additional flow (above the 1120 cfs) will be required to dilute effluent in the estuary. In other words, assuming the accuracy of the Corps projections, municipal and industrial water use will only require sufficient storage by 1985 to increase low flows by 260 cubic feet per second, but waste dilution flows will require sufficient storage to increase low flows an additional 3680 cubic feet per second. The real issue then is whether the large amount of storage contemplated by the Corps is justified for dilution of wastes and flood control.

Third, the effects of low flow augmentation upon water quality are not understood very well. The margin of error in estimates of the effects of waste dilution flows is relatively great because techniques are new. Studies and research are still under way to perfect them. There seems to be no doubt that waste dilution flows will make some improvement.

Fourth, the need for dredging the estuary may not be greatly affected by the Corps-SCS program in the near future. The SCS program will take quite a while to become effective – as much as 25 years, possibly even longer. Of the four reservoir alternatives, only the River Bend Dam would have an appreciable effect soon on sediment inflow to the estuary. Furthermore, sediment now in the estuary tends to move into existing channels. Thus we can anticipate that there will be dredging of the estuary for some time to come if we want to use it for navigation and eliminate some of the mud flats.

With this background, I want to identify some of the value judgments we are called upon to make in deciding upon a solution for the Potomac Puzzle. These are judgments that should be decided through the political process.

1. Is it better to entail the costs in scenic values and dollars to assure some improvement in water quality by storing water to provide waste dilution flows, or should we put up with poor quality water during the low flow period, or should we delay a decision in anticipation that science will provide an economical way of treating wastes to make the provision of large quantities of dilution water unnecessary? No one of these three alternatives can be considered unreasonable.

2. Is it better to entail the costs in dollars, in scenic values and in free stream recreation in exchange for large recreation areas of the type proposed by the Corps and the lake type of recreation they provide?

3. Is it better to permit sediment to continue to accumulate in the estuary while the SCS program is becoming effective, or dredge some of it, or store some of it behind a dam at River Bend or Seneca?

4. Is it better to reduce flood damages and enhance land values from flood control reservoirs in view of the costs they entail than it is to bear the damages and limit the use of flood plain lands?

5. Is it better to develop hydro power in view of the various kinds of costs that are involved than to rely upon fuel?

In view of the widespread interest in what I have called the Valley Preservation and Recreation Enhancement Alternative, I think it would be helpful if the public agencies were to present one or more plans based on this alternative. Whatever present costs may be for purifying water to avoid waste dilution, it is not unreasonable for a person to hold that in view of the national importance of the pollution problem, scientific research will find an economic solution within a decade. It is reasonable for a person to hold this view whether one agrees with it or not. Accordingly, I feel that the public should have the opportunity of considering this alternative.

Plans based on this alternative would seek answers to a number of questions of the following nature. How much storage would be required for municipal, industrial, and agricultural purposes and where would it be located? When would it be built in order to meet the prospective growth in demand? How much more acreage of lake-type recreation would be justified by a regional recreation program and how would it be provided? Is it practicable to pipe effluent from D. C. to the Chesapeake as Dr. Wolman has proposed? What scientific advances, if any, will be necessary to meet specified water quality objectives in the absence of storage for dilution of wastes? What would be the effect upon water quality at various locations in the basin in the absence of economically practicable purification techniques? What would be a sensible program of flood plain use in the basin, that is, where would levees be justified and how should use of flood plains be regulated? What would be the dollar costs of this type of alternative program?

The construction of any engineering work with the permanence of a dam is a solemn decision. Accordingly, it behooves all of us to understand as well as we are able the consequences of the alternative solutions from which we can choose.

Foreword

In its survey of the relationship of higher education to the study of urbanism, especially in the Washington area, the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies has thought it desirable to introduce new educational concepts and experiences that have been developed elsewhere. One of these is described in the following pages, an illustration of the role of general education in helping meet the manpower needs of increasing urbanization. Other new concepts that have been explored include Washington as a laboratory for urban studies that might be used by students located elsewhere, and the special needs of international students that might be met by some development of Washington's educational and research resources. The Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies would be interested in further developments in this field which appear promising in their application here.

This account is based on the remarks of Professor Eldredge to a series of meetings in November 1961 with representatives of various national organizations, including the American Institute of Planners, the American Institute of Architects, the American Society of Landscape Architects, the Urban Land Institute, the American Council on Education, and the Municipal Manpower Commission; of agencies of the Federal Government, including the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Office of Education, and the Agency for International Development; and of The American University, The Catholic University of America, Georgetown University, The George Washington University, Howard University, the University of Maryland, and the University of Virginia.

The Dartmouth Story:

Undergraduate Education for Urban Life and Urban Affairs

H. WENTWORTH ELDREDGE Chairman, City Planning and Urban Studies Program, Dartmouth College

ATLEE E. SHIDLER Director of Educational Activities Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE, a pastoral undergraduate institution situated somewhat outside the limits of Jean Gottmann's "Megalopolis," has in the past fifteen years sent over seventy-five graduates on to advanced work in city planning, architecture (with a planning interest), urban administration and related fields. Leading east coast planning schools and urban studies centers actively recruit for these graduates and regard Dartmouth as unsurpassed in stimulating students to do graduate work in their fields.

But the City Planning and Urban Studies Program at Dartmouth is not primarily a pre-professional training program. It is rather a broad liberal arts educational response to the fact that ours is a predominately urban society. The Program reflects a strengthening of the urban dimension in a wide range of courses. It relates undergraduate to graduate education in a dynamic and flexible manner. It has attracted a high caliber of students. And it includes a promising field study seminar offered in cooperation with a leading metropolitan university.

To institutions of general education the Dartmouth Program has a special significance as it shows how foundations can be built for later specializations, and to the graduate and professional schools it illustrates a desirable preparation for their programs. At this meeting point we can discern a relationship that deserves further development in education for urban life and urban affairs.

The general American educational response to urbanization has tended to be additive, specialized, confined to the classroom, focused on the United States, and concentrated at the graduate and professional levels. We have added courses, majors, departments, and institutions to the existing educational structure. We have developed specialized graduate programs for training urban affairs professionals and technicians. We have done little, however, to exploit the educational potential of the metropolitan environment. We have devoted only slight attention to urbanization abroad. And we have hardly begun to examine the potential role of undergraduate education either as the source of a citizenry prepared for urban affairs or as a means of motivating and preparing students to train for careers in urban affairs.

To be sure, a growing number of universities and colleges offer undergraduate degrees in city planning. Many offer a variety of urban subject courses which at a few institutions may be combined into an urban studies major. Some are putting students into metropolitan environments in active ways that familiarize them with the processes of decision-making and technological innovation and expose them to the highest levels of professional thought and practice.

But the most promising aspect of the developing undergraduate response to urbanization is the work of individual professors, who, approaching urbanism as an important aspect of their own field rather than as a separate discipline, are either introducing urban themes into traditional courses or strengthening those themes where they already exist. Their effort looks toward meeting the urban education needs of all students. In varying degrees, this is the situation at many institutions. It is very much the situation at Dartmouth, but the unique development there is the emergence of a formal program that actively coordinates and promotes this approach to urban studies. This program has gone a long way toward providing a considerable number of undergraduates with a basic understanding of urban development and urban life, but it also provides outstanding preparation for graduate work and professional training without offering either a special degree or even an urban studies major.

The basic elements of the program are an introductory core course on urban growth, problems and planning; two or three other special courses; cooperation among the faculty members who teach courses that contain urban subject matter; an advisory service to students and faculty; a coordinating senior seminar with opportunity for research; a system of summer internships; and an inter-university seminar. Cooperation, counseling, coordination, and a few special courses comprise the essential ingredients of the Dartmouth Program.

The introductory course dates back to 1921 when it was first offered as "City Planning, Civic Art and Domestic Architecture" in the Art Department. In the early thirties it became "The Art of City Planning," under the joint direction of Lewis Mumford and the German architect and planner Walter Kurt Behrendt. Hugh Morrison, an architectural historian, taught the course during the late thirties and early forties. This variety of skills firmly established the course as a vehicle of general education. After World War II it passed to H. Wentworth

Eldredge, an urban sociologist, who retitled it "An Introduction to City Planning and Urban Studies."

The focus of the course as taught by a sociologist naturally has shifted from design to social science, but the course has retained a considerable physical planning content, thereby underscoring the view that a basic aim of urban studies is to make design more sensitive to fundamental human needs and social values. The course also has changed from a somewhat specialized pre-profession one into a general introduction to current urban conditions that views the city as a dynamic whole. It has thus become an effective means for motivating students to take other courses in the Program, to do advanced work in urban studies, and to choose careers in planning and urban affairs. The early orientation of the Program toward international experience, given to it initially by Mumford and Behrendt, has been maintained and strengthened.

The introductory course, itself, is divided into four parts. Part I, "An Urban Mess," explores the impact of metropolitan growth on traditional human and specifically urban values and raises the question: Is city planning the solution? Part II, "The Planning Process," considers such matters as organization for planning, zoning as a planning tool, planning and the political process, and state and Federal roles in urban development and planning. Part III, "Planning Problems," deals first with general urban functions and then turns to community and neighborhood aspects of housing, and particularly to Garden Cities, Greenbelt Towns, New Towns, and Park Forest. Part IV, "Renewal," considers conservation, rehabilitation, and redevelopment in terms of specific programs in three different cities.

On first acquaintance with city planning and urban studies, Dartmouth students seem to be attracted primarily to the design and technical aspects. Later they become interested in social, economic, and administrative problems. At once ambitious and idealistic, they discover planning as a field in which they can both do good and achieve professional status with reasonable pay. In addition, they are intrigued by the seeming managerial possibilities of city and metropolitan planning and administration.

In the closely-knit academic community of Hanover, it became evident that courses in various departments were incorporating increasing amounts of urban subject matter. Gradually those efforts were coordinated. A set of gentlemen's agreements of the you-teach-that-and-I'll-teach-this kind, best described as the "sloppy British approach," were worked out. Some of the principal courses and departments involved are Administration in the Department of ADMINISTRATION; Modern Architecture, Basic Design, Architectural Design, and Urban Design (newly instituted in 1962) in ART; Economic and Social Statistics, Tax Problems, and Intermediate Economic Theory in ECONOMICS; Cartography, Commercial and Industrial Geography, and Industrial Locations in GEOGRAPHY; The Politics of the Metropolitan Region, Public Administration and Policy Development, and Political Behavior in GOVERNMENT; The City, An Introduction to City Planning and Urban Studies, and a coordinating senior seminar in SOCIOLOGY; and a new seminar on urbanization in the nineteenth century in HISTORY.

As the rather loose arrangements between the members of the faculty matured, the question of the desirability of an inter-departmental major inevitably arose. The decision of faculty and administration was to preserve the general education framework only slightly formalized in these developing arrangements. A new major did not, in their judgment, represent what Dartmouth was best equipped to contribute to the field. They chose instead to organize what had evolved as essentially an advisory and coordinating service to both students and faculty. Dartmouth would continue to familiarize its students with planning and other urban affairs professions, but, in keeping with its broad liberal arts tradition, it would approach urbanism as a dimension of thought and as an important aspect of many fields and professions.

An already substantial and growing portion of the intellectual resources of Dartmouth College are thus being focused on the city, much as the American Academy in Rome has brought scholars from various disciplines together to focus on ancient civilization. The result is that students are being educated to view the city as an organic whole—a dynamic combination of people, physical environment, institutions, neighborhoods, architecture, functions, values, economic activities, government, interest groups, leadership, and traditions. Dartmouth is educating urbanists, not planners or architects or administrators; that job is left to graduate and professional schools.

On the other hand, the Dartmouth Program extends the horizons of students whose career goals are already firmly set. Many students, for instance, who are aiming toward careers in architecture emerge from the Program with a strong bent in the direction of urban design.

The Program was strengthened when it brought into its orbit a joint Dartmouth-M.I.T. seminar in political science. Organized by Robert C. Wood of M.I.T. and Frank Smallwood of Dartmouth, the seminar brought together in a single study group students of public administration, liberal arts, engineering, and science. In their junior year (there have been a few seniors) six Dartmouth students and six M.I.T. students spend a full term together in the Boston area. Other variations on this are to be tried shortly. The students work in a coordinating seminar, and each must complete a research project resulting from field work in the Boston area.

The entire Dartmouth Program is tied together by a coordinating senior seminar that is, in effect, a continuation of the introductory course on city planning and urban studies. It employs the resources of the participating departments, and it draws lecturers from other universities and from the world of affairs. Representatives of leading graduate schools of planning and urban studies often lecture to the introductory course as well as to this seminar, integrating these trips to Hanover into their general recruitment program.

Among the special inducements of the Program are three summer internships aimed at juniors, which carry stipends of $900 each and thus enable the student to return to college with $500 saved for senior year expenses. Other internship opportunities are available, and in the summer of 1962 a total of twelve Dartmouth students were interns in urban affairs. The possibility of getting into print even before leaving college is another attraction; two student-faculty research projects have resulted in journal articles.

But the principal inducement is simply the intellectual stimulation and the flexible structure of the Program. A student may enter or leave it by many routes and at any time. The number of courses he takes is optional. It may be one or as many as five or six, depending largely on whether he is a freshman or a senior when he discovers and informally enters the Program. A geography major, for instance, may not develop an interest in urban studies until he has taken the course on Industrial Locations in his junior or senior year. He may then enroll in the introductory course or in such other courses as The Politics of the Metropolitan Region, Architectural Design, or Economic and Social Statistics. His decision will depend on his interests, on the number of electives available to him, and on the advice of his department and of the Chairman of the Program.

Thus the Program is highly flexible, more circular than hierarchical in structure. For the student it is a means of coordinating whatever electives, either in his major department or in another, he may wish to use to explore the field of city planning and urban studies. The system capitalizes on and reinforces the process whereby many undergraduates scout the curriculum in search of a career. This flexibility and diffuseness have given an urban dimension to a sizeable and growing segment of the Dartmouth curriculum.

By the time students have had a number of courses in the Dartmouth Program, they usually know whether their interests and competence lie within this field. And although the Program is mainly just a part of the liberal arts curriculum that has received a large urban injection, it includes enough specialized courses for the faculty to be able to give graduate schools a sound evaluation of the abilities of the students who have worked in it. An indication that the linkage with graduate education is a strong one is the fact that a "B" or better in certain Dartmouth courses is accepted by some of the leading graduate schools as preparation equivalent to work in their own graduate level introductory courses. The student is thus able to move directly into advanced courses. Though graduate work is not thereby shortened, it is accelerated and hence made more sophisticated.

As noted above, an average of four or five men per year go from the Program to graduate training in city planning, urban studies, and urban and metropolitan administration. Two have won Sears-Roebuck city planning fellowships, and all are keenly appreciated by planning schools, which increasingly seek the breadth and depth of a liberal arts education as preparation for professional education. The Dartmouth Program thus offers high hopes that urban affairs and urban studies can compete successfully for the better students at American colleges and universities.

Each year, ten to fifteen additional men, who have worked on the fringes of the Program, begin graduate training for other, not specifically urban-oriented, professions. They will be more effective, both as professionals and as citizens, for having been alerted by a program that seeks to relate the traditional liberal arts curriculum more strongly to the urban society in which we live. A still larger number will have taken one or more of the courses without participating in the Program in any organized way. These further accomplishments of the Dartmouth Program are important, for the field of urban affairs is highly dependent upon informed political and civic leadership.

Dartmouth has thus shown a way in which an undergraduate institution can prepare students both for urban living and for careers in urban affairs, much as students for years have been prepared for careers in medicine, law, engineering, and other professions. It has done so without new faculty or new educational structure, without endless committee meetings and negotiations, and without any financial strain. Surely other colleges and universities can profitably examine the Dartmouth experience for its possible relevance to their own situations.

THE URBAN REVOLUTION: CHALLENGE TO THE NEXT GENERATION

Address by Warren Jay Vinton, Mayor of Somerset, Maryland, and former Assistant Commissioner, Public Housing Administration, to the Conference on The Teacher and the Metropolis, of the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies. Thursday, November 29, 1962, at the Marriott Motor Hotel, Twin Bridges, Washington.

I understand that it is the function of this Conference to induce you to think about the revolutionary changes in which the whole world is enmeshed, and then to act as a guide, comforter, and friend to your students as they confront their new and rapidly changing environment in Metropolitan Washington.

The Urban Revolution and Its Manifestations

In 1890, when the continental United States had finally been occupied and Frederick Jackson Turner announced the "End of the Frontier," only 35 percent of our population lived in urban areas, that is, in places of over 2500 persons. By 1920, just after the end of World War I, the urban population had increased to 51 percent and the Urban Revolution was upon us. By 1960 the population in urban places had reached 70 percent of the total.

The Urban Revolution in man's pattern of living is no less a revolution than the Renaissance which changed man's pattern of thinking about himself and nature, and the Industrial Revolution which changed his pattern of production. But this revolution, unlike the others, is not confined to the western nations but is worldwide in scope.

What are the manifestations of this Urban Revolution into which we are plunged, and the final results of which we can barely envision?

First in importance and in dire potentialities is the population explosion. Procreation and births continue uninterruptedly, but babies no longer die in infancy and the span of life is being dramatically lengthened. The whole world is faced with a rapidly expanding population in which non-productive younger and older age groups are increasingly represented.

This rapidly growing population is flocking to ever-expanding metropolises which have over-run old city boundaries and are spreading with frightening speed into their suburbs. The mechanization of agriculture requires an ever smaller working force to supply the needs of the whole population, and rural areas are static or even decline in population. Growth is almost wholly confined to great metropolitan areas where it is sustained and accelerated by complex mass-production industries with specialized employments which function best in the diversified labor markets of great cities.

The automobile has contributed a new and unheard-of mobility to our population. The motor car appeared as an important factor in our economy in the ten years between 1910 and 1920. In that decade automobile registrations in the United States increased from less than half a million to over nine million. Since then motor cars have increased eight times over to nearly 75 million, and are today the chief reliance for transportation in most of our expanding metropolitan areas.

Wars and Their Aftermath

Population pressures and competition for natural resources and for markets were among the most potent causes of the two global wars which shook the world out of the complacency of the early nineteen hundreds when it was assumed that peace, though at times uneasy, would continue indefinitely. These two world wars have unsettled mankind and left us in a fearful uncertainty as to our future. The potential threat of thermo-nuclear war, to which our expanding metropolitan areas would be particularly vulnerable, has imparted a cynical fatalism to life. We simply turn our backs on the threat, dismiss civil defense as being impractical (which it probably is), and hope for the best.

Our economy is burdened by the drain of immense expenditures for national security and the obligations left over from former wars which together eat up 76 percent of our Federal budget and impose a heavy burden of taxation on us all. But despite this drain on our productive capacity of 61 billions of dollars a year, American families have the highest average disposable income in all their history. Of course, there is nothing like a good average to gloss over the real situation in this case the fact that millions of families are living in dire poverty, subsisting on a mere pittance, and housed in dwellings that are a disgrace to our civilization.

Special Problems Confronting Young Adults

Before getting down to specifics in relation to Metropolitan Washington, I call your attention to three matters, characteristic of the Urban Revolution, which will be of immediate importance to your students as they move into the status of young adults.

The first is the draft -- a new element in American life which poses a hard dilemma for all young males. Shall they volunteer as soon as possible and get military service over with or shall they go on with college only to volunteer or be drafted just as their training is completed and they are prepared to launch out on life's work?

The second is the greatly increased competition which they will face in seeking employment. Due to the low birth rates which followed World War I and extended through the depression and on to 1945, the number of youths who reached working age from 1940 to the present time has been relatively small, resulting in a tight labor market and rising earnings. But this condition is about to change. After 1945 the birth rate rose rapidly and the children engendered thereafter are beginning to enter the labor market.

Between 1960 and 1970 the number of persons in the age group 20 to 24 years will increase by 6 million. This extraordinary flood of youths will encounter mounting difficulties in finding jobs, and wage and salary rates may tend to soften.

The third matter of especial importance to young adults is the ever-increasing extent to which they are destined to become cogs in great industrial or commercial enterprises rather than independent entrepreneurs and masters of their own destiny. Fifty or sixty years ago women found productive outlets in their own homes -- in food production including baking and canning, in clothes making, and a host of other housekeeping tasks. Today vast numbers of women find employment in clerical positions and as operatives in the light mass-production industries. Fifty or sixty years ago many men worked for themselves or in partnerships or in relatively small undertakings where they felt some personal involvement. Today they are herded into ever larger enterprises or institutions with which they have only the most distant and impersonal relationships. Even the pursuit of science and invention has been pre-empted by great corporations and institutions, and the role of the lone-wolf inventor such as Thomas Edison or Henry Ford seems to be gone forever. To be his own boss, man must cultivate one of the professions -- law, medicine, or the arts.

I do not maintain there is no longer any place for personal creation and independent activity, but I do believe that the increasing mechanization and large-scale organization of our economic life, together with the insistent pressures of advertising, radio, TV, and mass circulation publications, are breeding a conformity and an atrophy of individuality that bode ill for the future. The only non-institutionalized elements in the life of the average man are his wife, his children, and his home on a quarter-acre lot -- and our subdividers and speculative builders are working hard to institutionalize the third one of these refuges.

So much for the Urban Revolution in general. Let us now turn to its impact on Metropolitan Washington.

The Triumph of Suburbia

In the last decade the 212 metropolitan areas in the United States (that is, cities over 50,000 population together with their adjoining suburban counties) have increased their population by nearly 24 millions, or 84 percent of the total national increase. A great majority of the central cities have long since used up most of the land within their old city limits and have been unable to extend their boundaries by annexation. As a result, growth has been confined very largely to the suburbs, which have pre-empted 18 million or 76 percent of the total metropolitan growth.

The older central cities have shown insignificant gains, and many of them, especially in the East, have lost population through voluntary migration to the suburbs or through displacement by industry, commerce, freeways, and parking lots.

Washington is no exception to the rule--in fact, it much resembles other eastern metropolises, but with two striking exceptions:

(1) In all other metropolitan areas the central city has a government while here we have the Congress.

(2) As if in compensation, our central city is blessed with a great Federal establishment, which has a stable and well-paid host of employees, and which insists on maintaining a beautiful and dignified setting for its activities, though it is loathe to pay a fair share of the cost of this beauty and dignity.

In the Washington metropolitan area, population increased from 1,464,000 in 1950 to 2,002,000 in 1960, a growth of 37 percent within the decade. All of this growth was concentrated in the suburbs; indeed the central city declined from 802,000 to 764,000, a loss of nearly 5 percent. The surrounding areas (Montgomery and Prince Georges countries in Maryland, Fairfax and Arlington counties and the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church on the opposite side of the Potomac) at the beginning of the decade had a combined population of 140,000 less than the District. By 1960 their population overshadowed the District by 474,000; it had increased by 87 percent in ten years to a total of 1,238,000 persons.

Fairfax and Montgomery counties were the most rapidly growing suburban areas. Each had a population increase of 176,000 in the decade, with growths of 179 and 107 percent, respectively. These fantastic rates of growth were among the half dozen highest in the country for areas of comparable magnitude.

The extraordinary rate of suburban growth stems from three principal factors:

(1) The net increase of births over deaths in the suburbs themselves.

(2) The population exported year by year from the District of Columbia to the suburbs; in the short period of five years from 1955 to 1960 not less than 93 thousand persons moved from the central city to the suburbs.

(3) An influx from other counties, states, and even foreign nations; from 1955 to 1960 there were 276 thousand such in-migrants from outside the metropolitan area.

It seems probable that this growth of the metropolitan area will continue. The National Capital Planning Commission estimates a metropolitan population of 5 million people by the year 2000, a growth of 150 percent in 40 years. The Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission agrees with this figure and goes on to estimate that the two counties in which this Commission functions (Montgomery and Prince Georges) will increase in population from less than 700,000 in 1960 to nearly 2,200,000 at the end of the century, a growth of 215 percent.

The Bitter Problems of Growth

The continued growth of the metropolitan area will, as in the past, pose problems of the greatest difficulty both to the central city and to the suburbs. The central city will be the site of a growing Federal establishment and the offices of an over increasing number of lawyers, lobbyists, and trade associations. While commercial and industrial establishments proliferate, further highways and parking lots will become necessary, and thousands of families will be displaced for whom no decent housing is being provided.

The problems of growth are even more difficult in the suburbs. New subdivisions, hastily planned and poorly related to each other, spring up all over the landscape, and demand to be serviced with access roads, sewers, and water. There is a mad scramble for commercial zoning, and garish shopping centers quickly destroy the beauty and dignity of every major highway. The prices of land are pushed higher and higher by competitive speculators, whose profits at the expense of the general public increase the costs of new homes and of all public improvements.

The capital investment required for such growth is staggering in amount. It is certainly safe to say of Montgomery County, which more than doubled its population in ten years, that the new capital required for residential, commercial and industrial establishments, and for schools, roads, and other public improvements in this one decade far exceeded the total of all previous capital investments in the county since the beginning of time. The enormous expansion of the county establishment to accommodate this growth resulted in tax increases which, though moderate and inevitable, led to the summary dismissal in this fall's election of the officials who had voted them.

Faced with these multitudinous troubles it is usual for planners to refer to "growth" as the source of all their difficulties. "A Policy Plan for the Year 2000," prepared for the Nation's Capital, says, for instance: "Like every metropolis it has problems -- traffic congestion, water pollution, vanishing open space, crowded schools, rising taxes, obsolescence, blight. These problems are steadily getting more serious despite the determined efforts of many people. Why? The main reason is growth."

Why Not Control Growth Through Biologic Planning?

Should we not try to stop or at least control this headlong growth rather than accepting it as inevitable and devoting herculean attempts to remedying its consequences? Should we not do a little biological planning as well as physical planning and pay some attention to the future of man himself as well as the future of his environment?

Mankind has for many generations known the cause of population increase, but it is only in the last generation that we have discovered how it is possible to continue the cherished intimacy of man and woman while controlling its consequences. Planned parenthood now offers us acceptable means for curbing the population explosion which threatens to engulf us and the rest of the world in disaster.

How pleasant, how reassuring it would be if we could look forward to a relatively stable population here and abroad? We would not have to desecrate a beautiful country side through frantic subdivision and speculative building, but could devote our resources to replacing and rejuvenating, the worn-out portions of our housing inventory and otherwise renewing our physical environment.

Advance planning today scarcely dares look beyond the year 1980 or at most 2000, but with a relatively stable population we could with some assurance face the year 2100 or even 2500. We could hope to hand down to our descendents some upspoiled wilderness and mountains, some unblemished lakes and seashore. We might even hand down some natural resources such as minerals, coal, and oil, and some unpolluted rivers and steeams.

But if the present mad population increase continues, the world's resources will be despoiled and men will be huddled in crowded apartments with no chance of any revivifying contact with nature. I commend to you a reading of "The Next Million Years" by the grandson of Charles Darwin for a picture of the horrid future of mankind if, we do not control the untrammeled growth of the world's population.

Two New General Plans for Metropolitan Washington

However, most of the children who will account for any family formation up to 1980 are already in being and we must do our best to plan for them. Two comprehensive plans have recently been prepared for the Washington area, "A Policy Plan for the Year 2000" by the National Capital Planning Commission and the National Capital Regional Planning Council, and a second plan quaintly entitled "On Wedges and Corridors" prepared for two Maryland counties by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission. Both of these are so-called policy plans, meant to expound a concept of growth and illustrate it by diagrammatic maps, though the Maryland map being on a larger scale appears to assign land uses to specific areas.

Both plans recommend a star-patterned metropolis, with development outside a central area being concentrated along radial corridors served by rapid transit or freeways. This is, of course, the pattern that most cities, including Washington, were following more or less automatically some 50 or 60 years ago when growth naturally moved out along the lines of street-cars and suburban trains. In those days before the advent of the motor car the intervening wedges with no transportation service were left comparatively open and undeveloped.

But the automobile changed all that, and as our street cars and trolleys disappeared the entire circumference of the suburbs became almost equally accessible. Suburban sprawl became the order of the day, with little or no planning except an attempt to separate out and bring together various types of land use through zoning.

The two new general plans would call a halt to suburban sprawl and introduce order and design in the growth of the Metropolis. These plans are bold and exciting in concept, and stir the imaginations by showing the kind of metropolis we could have if we only wanted it enough.

Radial Growth the Essence of These Plans

Both plans revert to the early tradition of radial growth and would concentrate future development along six corridors running out from the central city, four in Maryland and two in Virginia. Both plans have as a crucial element of policy the maintenance of the wedges between these corridors as "open spaces" to impart some variety to the metropolis and give its inhabitants some easy access to outdoors. Some part of the wedges would be acquired for parks, wildlife refuges, or watershed reserves but the rest would (hopefully) be kept in open-space uses such as farming, forestry, golf courses, or institutions with wide-spreading lawns.

In order to impart life and variety to the corridors, both plans would provide new corridor cities strung out say five miles apart. These would be centers of real importance with populations running up to 100,000 or 125,000, with office buildings and major stores surrounding a rapid transit station, with high-rise apartments a little farther off, then garden-type apartments, and finally single-family dwellings at the edge of the corridor with larger and larger lots as they approached the open space wedges.

Can These Plans be Carried Out

These are neat and beguiling prospects -- but in some vague, uneasy way they remind me of the "civic center" and "city beautiful" plans that were produced 30 or 40 years ago at a time when the profession of landscape architect was gradually giving way to the profession of city planning. These beautiful designs for refurbishing city centers were seldom if ever accompanied by any workable recommendations as to how they could be carried out or where the money was coming from. As a result they generally were not carried out.

I fear this same dreamlike quality is present to a greater or less degree in the two new plans for metropolitan Washington.

What are the chances of carrying out these plans with the aid of the public powers now available? Very thin, I venture to say.

How Can We Maintain Large Open Spaces?

There can be no argument as to the desirability of maintaining large wedges of open space, but how do the proponents of these two plans hope to do so? Publicly owned parks, watershed reserves, and large government institutions such as agricultural research stations will tie down some open space on a long-term basis, But farming, dairying, and forestry on in-lying suburban lands are far less profitable than selling out for a subdivision. How then to keep these lands in open use when located in one of the wedges?

By zoning? I think not. It does not appeal to the American sense of fair dealing that one owner with a farm 15 miles from the White House should be precluded from any development of his land because it lies in an area planned as an open-space wedge, while a second owner of a farm equally distant makes a fortune because his property happens to lie in an area planned as the center of a corridor city.

While public bodies may, of course, use zoning to keep the wedges relatively more open than the corridors by limiting their use to large residential lots or even to residential estates, I do not believe they will use zoning to keep areas out of any development whatever. If we intend to preserve large areas as true open spaces, we will in the long run have to face their acquisition for parks or other public uses, or the purchase of development rights to guarantee their continuance in private open-space use.

As to the proposed corridors, how are we to assure that they will develop according to the neat designs of the two plans or even develop at all?

"On Wedges and Corridors" says we have several examples that can be drawn upon such as the "new towns" of England, Vallingby outside Stockholm, as well as Radburn and the Greenbelt Towns in this country. Yes, indeed, these are examples, though the staff of the Park and Planning Commission neglects to tell us examples of what. The fact is that an essential feature in each of these undertakings was the public ownership of the land on which they were built, as well as the large role which public enterprise played in their development. With public ownership the adopted plans of these cities were made to stick and development was carried out in accordance with them even when it was undertaken by private entrepreneurs. Moreover, public ownership of the land secured for the public the increased realty values which were created by putting the land to intensive use.

It must be remembered that any public action (including zoning) which changes the prescribed uses of land serves to transfer values from some parcels to other parcels, moving values upward with more intensive uses and vice versa. If the public is to compensate those whom it calls upon to keep their land in open use (and I think it should compensate them), it is abundantly fair that the public should balance out by capturing all or at least a major part of increase in land values due to more intensive zoning or to the construction of public improvement s. For example, a very substantial portion of the construction cost of a rapid transit and subway system could be met if the public was able to capture the increased realty values created along the rights-of-ways, especially in the neighborhood of stations.

A New Plan for Mass Transportation

This brings me to the very controversial subject of mass transportation. I for one enjoy getting around in my own private car either downtown or in the country-side. I also enjoy other people's children and love my own. But in both of these matters I believe in some moderation, and advocate curbing not only the population explosion but also the motor-car explosion.

I am particularly apprehensive about the ultimate results of continually catering to the demands of the automobiles in our downtown areas. I am aghast at the prospect of cutting up Washington and its suburbs with freeways running through great Chinese ditches, separating neighborhood from neighborhood, and creating vast concrete wastelands for use as parking. I am aghast at the the destruction of beauty, dignity, and amenity which this will entail, and I am particularly aghast at the dislocation of thousands of families from their homes and accustomed neighborhoods.

After much reflection I have come to the conclusion that if our cities are not to be overwhelmed and destroyed by the automobile we must stop pandering to it and devise more acceptable means for urban mobility. I often think of Wall Street in this connection. Almost no one, not even the president of a very great bank, attempts to reach Wall Street by automobile, for the streets are narrow and crowded and parking space almost unavailable. So since no facilities are provided for a motor-car invasion, the public of necessity travels to and from the financial district by subway -- uncomfortable perhaps, but certainly expeditiously.

In Washington we can for the first time envision what a well-planned subway and rapid transit system might accomplish in providing transportation without abject surrender to the motor car. The report of November 1, 1962 to the President of the United States by the National Capital Transportation Agency is a lucid and persuasive presentation of a rapid transit plan capable of delivering passengers within a few minutes' walk of almost all the employment centers of downtown Washington. This report, with a wealth of specific information, is a remarkable document to have been produced in the short lifetime of the Agency. Though they have an air of versimilitude I cannot, of course, vouch for the accuracy of the Agency's figures on capital cost, income, and expense -- both because I am not an expert on such matters and because details of the various computations leading to its conclusions have not yet been published. When published they will, of course, be available for the most careful scrutiny, but in the meantime I resent the ill-considered sarcasm of the late brilliant but opinionated Director of the National Capital Planning Commission which implied that detailed substantiation of the Agency's estimates would "never" be collated and published.

The Agency, having examined the potentialities of modern technology, feels justified in promising that, at a locally acceptable level of fares, it can provide a metropolitan-wide service that will be rapid, comfortable, clean, and relatively noiseless. I take great exception to the ill-intentioned attacks which have been leveled at this prospectus solely on the ground that "it has never been done anywhere else" -- the same old prophesy of doom which has been hurled at the Wright brothers and hundreds of other successful innovators.

I hope that in the coming months the proposals of the National Capital Transportation Agency will be considered on their merits, free from political prejudice and personal antagonism. Unlike the two plans for the year 2000 which are policy statements, the report of the Transportation Agency recommends a well-defined program which, if it can be brought into being, will afford a potent and essential support for the policies set forth in the two plans for the year 2000.

Housing Needs of the Washington Metropolis

Housing in our metropolis is another problem where time is running against us, and the conventional processes of our economy give no prospect of any easy and automatic solution.

In 1960 there were 48,000 dwelling units in the metropolitan area which were not in sound condition. There were a further 23,000 which, while structurally sound, lacked some plumbing facility, a pretty sure sign of unsatisfactory condition. Out of the total of 71,000 deficient units, about 60 percent were in the District.

Perhaps a third of these units could be considered slum dwellings which should generally be torn down. They were occupied almost entirely by families of low income, often by broken families, and very often by Negroes.

Most of the other deficient dwellings were in gray areas of blight and decay in the District (such as the Northwest area between Massachusetts and Florida Avenues) and in the nearby portions of the older suburbs. Some of this housing must be demolished in neighborhood rebuilding, but much of it can be saved and rehabilitated if the progress of neighborhood blight can be arrested.

Washington needs a large additional supply of housing available to low and middle income groups to re-house families now living in dwellings which should be destroyed, and a further supply for the thousands of families who will be displaced by highway and other construction projects. And of course housing must be supplied to accommodate the increase in numbers of low and middle income families, an increase which comes from family formation within the metropolitan area itself and from the large and incessant in-migration of such families.

The Inadequacy of Present Solutions and the Relative Failure of Public Housing

All these needs of lower and middle income families must be met with housing of acceptable standards if we are to create a decent living environment for all our people. But how?

Private builders serve only families in the upper parts of the income scale. The dwellings vacated by their purchasers move down a notch to supply lower income groups, and so on like musical chairs, until after many dreary years the houses come within the price range of low income families, but so worn out and dilapidated that they should no longer be continued in use.

There is also an additional supply of dwellings for lower and middle income families through the cutting up of large older houses and apartments -- sometimes providing satisfactory living conditions but more often not.

Finally there is public housing, a program bright with promise in 1937 when it was inaugurated, and again in 1949 when Congress gave it a new and generous lease on life after the war period. Senator Robert A. Taft, that great and good Republican, stated it as his opinion that about one-tenth of all residential construction in the United States should be public housing to meet the needs of low income families. Had this ratio been maintained we would now have two million public housing units, whereas alas we have only half a million.

While I yield to no one in my support of public housing, I think I can discern the principal reasons for this relative failure. In the first place, it is public and it generally looks public and institutional, two things which the American family almost instinctively shuns. In the second place, in catering to very low income groups it has become a sort of economic ghetto where the indigent and underprivileged congregate and from which the more alert and energetic are expelled when their incomes reach established limits. And finally public housing, because of a wholly unwarranted fear that it will compete with their activities, has been opposed in season and out of season by developers, home builders, realtors, and other conservative propertied classes.

Despite the valiant and intelligent efforts of the National Capital Housing Authority, public housing has had no better success in Washington than elsewhere. The Authority is not empowered to operate in the suburbs where vacant land is available, while within the District sites have not been found for sufficient housing to accommodate the low income families displaced by government projects, let alone to start on the mission of depopulating the slums.

A New Program for Middle Income Housing and its Compelling Advantages

What is needed is a great and new supply of housing of good standards which will be available to middle income families. It is planned to formulate such a program for early presentation to the Congress. This program contemplates enlisting the cooperation of private builders of rental or sales housing who would be furnished Federal loans on especially advantageous terms. Their projects would be rented or sold at current going prices, but the builders would be required to take half their clients from families certified by public authorities as needing assistance in meeting rents or the monthly payments on purchased homes. The reductions made by the owner pursuant to such certificates would be rebated to him by the Federal Government out of the monthly debt service payments which he would otherwise have to make.

Such a program would greatly expand the present market of private builders by letting them cater to lower income groups than they now can reach. Projects would serve a wide range of income levels and foster a more democratic cross-section of economic groups than is now possible in public housing. The relations between owner and client would be the same as those customary in private life except for a determination by a public agency of the client's income for the purpose of setting his rent or interest rate. There would be no eviction for increased income; when a family became able to pay the full economic rent, its subsidy would cease but it would be able to continue occupancy of its home.

And finally a large new supply of housing for middle income groups would permit older acceptable housing to filter down to low income groups at rents they could afford, and would at long last make it possible to depopulate the slums.

There are many who believe that private developers would welcome such an opportunity to expand their markets, and if the suburban opposition to low and middle income groups can be worn down or broken at all it is thought that private developers can do it more easily than public housing authorities. I hope the Congress will authorize a beginning program along these lines, and that it can be utilized in Washington to expand the supply of good housing for the families of modest income who need it so desperately.

The Financing of a Great New Program of Public Works

The growth of our metropolitan areas and other urban places will require enormous expenditures both by private enterprise and by government. The role of government will of necessity continue to grow, for there is an increasing number of functions formerly undertaken by individuals and families which must now be undertaken by collective action.

I have mentioned a few of the governmental expenditures which will be required if we are to carry out the plans for an orderly and controlled metropolitan growth -- the outright purchase of open spaces or the acquisition of development rights; the advance purchase of land in corridors or corridor cities for subsequent resale and development by private entrepreneurs; land improvements including streets, roads, water, and sewers; schools, libraries, and other public buildings; rapid transit and subways; and an increase in the supply of housing for low and middle income groups. There are many other needs which I have not discussed such as education, urban renewal, airports, the eradication of water pollution and air pollution, and there will be others not yet envisioned.

How are these to be financed? The resources of local communities and of the states are already inadequate, because of limitations on the systems of taxation open to them. Real property taxation has long been outdated. It cannot raise funds adequate for the complex and growing needs of our urban society; it is difficult to administer fairly; and bears no direct relation to ability to pay.

Sales taxes are limited in amount, and are manifestly unfair because of their relatively high incidence on low income groups.

Income taxes (including capital gains taxes) are obviously the answer. Their yield is ample and since they bear more heavily on those best able to pay they are well suited to a nation like ours with its extremes of income and wealth. But income taxation is not feasible of application by cities and only to a limited extent by states. The Federal Government, however, can employ income taxation to great advantage, and if loopholes are closed and honest reporting assured through electronic cross-checking, the system will be eminently fair.

As the Urban Revolution has developed in this country, especially since the New Deal, the Federal Government, financing itself largely through income taxes, has undertaken a host of Federal-aided programs. Interstate roads with 90 percent grants and other roads with 50 percent grants, airports, public housing, urban renewal, public facilities, college housing, and open spaces are among these aided programs. Although these programs have been successful to a certain degree, there has been consistent and friction between Federal and local agencies, and progress has been almost interminably slow.

A New Philosophy of Federal Taxing and Local Spending

There is a school of thought developing, however, which looks forward to a new philosophy of public works financing which involves a division of labor between the Federal and local governments. The Federal Government would assume the role of principal tax collector for the nation, while state and local governments would plan, administer, and operate public works financed by revenues made available to them by the Federal Government on the basis of their needs.

This philosophy, I must emphasize, is very different from that which now prevails. Today Federal grants are looked upon as contributions to supplant local governments made out of funds owned and controlled by the central government. On the theory that he who pays the piper calls the tune, Federal legislation has allocated its grants to specific programs subject to specific conditions, and the Federal bureaucracy has undertaken a complete regulation of local programs. It approves sites, plans, and expenditures down to the minutest detail.

A new philosophy would recognize that the funds taken in by the Federal Government for local use are derived from local taxpayers and should be made available to local jurisdictions with no more strings than if they were collected directly by the local governments. Local governments could apply the funds which they receive to the purposes which best suit them, one place to urban renewal, another to rapid transit, or a third to housing. And in their expenditures they should be completely free from Federal intermeddling. For the wisdom and the honesty of their operations they should be responsible to their own local electorate, not to a Federal Administration.

We have the resources of material and capital to embark on great programs of urban improvement at once, and the volume of labor required by them would be of the greatest value in alleviating persistent unemployment. These programs, from a social point of view, are fully as important as our defense program. Yet it is a strange paradox of our capitalist economy that if by some fortunate arrangement for world-wide disarmament we were able to cut defense expenditures by say 30 billion dollars a year, the Congress would be most reluctant to invest even half of this sum in the rebuilding of our cities. I suppose the reason is that our defense program, the greatest public works project of all times, is favored by business interests because of its very satisfactory profits and because the vastly expensive hardware which it produces serves no consumer purpose and becomes obsolete so rapidly there is not the remotest chance it will stay around to compete with any form of private business.

Or might the reluctance of Congress be due to its belief that the American people do not value beautiful and commodious cities and an adequate standard of living for all our citizens sufficiently to tax themselves for these enlightened purposes?

The Coming Down of Fair Legislative Power for Our Cities

But come what may, our metropolitan areas and other cities will need to expend vast sums for their orderly growth, and will have to call on the cooperation of the Federal and state governments. For the last twenty or thirty years it has been increasingly difficult for urban areas to secure necessary legislation for this purpose because of their weak political power in relation to rural areas. Election districts set up years ago have given rural populations a disproportionate power both in state legislatures and in the Congress. Rural majorities have generally refused any reapportionment to correct this situation, and the courts have traditionally declined to intervene.

This year, however, the Supreme Court, in a decision which marks a major turning point in the Urban Revolution, has held that the courts can intervene to require and, if necessary to dictate, fair representation both in state legislatures and in the Congress. Within a few short years, urban groups seeking essential cooperation and assistance from the state legislatures and the Congress will be able to outvote the more conservative rural blocks. Then will come some inevitable splits between the older cities and the suburban areas, and before the decade is out we may have three, not two, voices clamoring for ascendency.

Our Archaic Governments and the Overseeming Power of Project Interests

The Washington metropolitan area is handicapped by one of the most difficult conglomerations of governmental organizations that has ever been devised. The District is governed by Congress, the non-resident proprietor of the central city's principal business. The three Commissioners, one of whom is an Army engineer with no local ties to the city, are surrounded, and supported or hampered, by a host of commissions, authorities, and boards, all of whom act under the constant scrutiny of the powerful Congressional committees concerned with District affairs. As a result there are multitudes of persons in the District who can veto any project, but not one person -- not even the President -- who can say "Yes" with any finality.

In the suburbs, governments are dominated by speculative land owners, developers, and builders who are the resident proprietors of the suburbs principal business. Their generous campaign contributions guarantee them an overwhelming voice in county affairs. While the governing body and its commissions procrastinate and delay, they busily but silently divide up the county, see to its zoning, plan its sewer and water systems, and lay out subdivisions unrelated to neighborhood plans. To them land is but a commodity, and they refuse to believe that it is vested with a large and important public interest.

The Lethargy of Our Citizens and Its Causes

The citizens of Washington are apparently oblivious of the fact that the patterns of metropolitan growth are being laid down for all time on the basis of maximum private profit rather than maximum public utility and amenity. The citizens from whom leadership should be drawn are lulled into complacency by their own prosperity which isolates them in split-level homes on their respective half-acre lots. They assume that things are not too bad for they never venture to inquire how much better they might be if they paid some attention to them. They naively believe in growth for growth's sake, and never question the assumption that bigger is always better.

Perhaps we should not blame the citizens of Washington too harshly for their lethargy and indifference. In the District they have no vote in their own affairs. In the suburbs the large numbers who are in the Federal service are debarred from political leadership through the Hatch Act. In earlier and more stable cultures, citizens gradually became acquainted with the problems of their community and acquired some experience in solving them. But today communities are not stable, but growing and changing at terrific rates, and the citizens themselves are highly mobile, living but a few short years in any one place. The problems of great cities are becoming too large in scale and too complex to fit into ordinary human experience. As citizens we hardly have time to understand the ingredients of a problem before it changes, and we are forever seeking a reorganization of functions in the hope that this will achieve the results which in reality can be achieved only through inspired and dedicated leadership.

The Challenge of the Urban Revolution to the Next Generation

The problems of our metropolis, though complex and difficult, are interesting, exciting, and challenging if we but become immersed in them. It is the hope of this conference that you, the mentors of the next generation, can help immerse your students in these problems, excite their curiosity, and urge them to think what they will do when they come into man's estate. I hope that they will grow up as citizens of the world determined to take effective steps to curb the population explosion; as citizens of the United States determined (among other things) to work out a new plan for financing the multitudinous activities needed to keep up with the Urban Revolution; as citizens of the metropolis determined to put the needs of the whole metropolis before they lesser needs of its parts; as citizens of their county or city determined to secure planning and land controls dictated by the public interest and not by private profit; and as citizens of their neighborhood determined to help create and to nurture a local community spirit.

In ending I want to emphasize the great value of local community spirit. My own Town of Somerset is a small community of under 400 families, but it forms a true neighborhood centered around our Somerset School. Thanks to having our own government and regular monthly meetings, we have developed a community attitude and a spirit of cooperation with each other and with our neighboring communities. Our Town has an individuality of its own and we have a feeling of "belonging" which is denied to families living in the great unorganized parts of the metropolis.

Although most other sections of the metropolis do not have the advantage of belonging to a Town, they do have a school as the focus of their neighborhoods and almost always an active parents' organization going along with it. With your aid as leaders in your respectful schools they can be made centers for study and participation in the problems of the Urban Revolution as they confront the next generation--problems which are certainly destined to become more complex and more difficult until we ultimately solve them or evade them--God grant it be the former.

THE WASHINGTON CENTER FOR METROPOLITAN STUDIES

A Bibliography of the Social Consequences of Large-Scale Physical Changes in the Urban Environment

by Marvin G. Cline
Summer 1962

Introductory Note

The following bibliography is a highly selected list from both the urban sociology and the urban planning literature. The primary criterion used in making the selection was the contribution of the article to the problem of the effects of physical change on community structure. Thus, a great many articles on urban structure were not included because they dealt with dimensions of society too gross to be directly related to the dynamics of the community (institutional, demographic, or ecological properties of structure). The only theoretical articles included were those whose hypotheses related to interpersonal behaviors and community structure.

The most interesting aspect of the planning literature is the great lack of serious attempt to assess the effects of the physical designs of the planners. At the same time there seems to be little interest in social structure on the part of those who plan the highways, while a small group of planning theoreticians have begun to exhort their colleagues to add social science data to the other data used in arriving at planning decisions. Consequently, one is faced with either a series of economic and ecological impact studies (which are largely irrelevant to the present paper), or a series of editorial comments on the necessity of coordinating the social sciences with the planners. These latter comments are interesting, although they add little substance to the discussion. For that reason, only a few of the more important, articulate, or influential of these comments have been included in the present bibliography. None of the economic impact studies have been included, although a few of the more recent surveys of this literature have been noted.

The only area which supplied data moderately close to the present topic was the literature on the social consequences of the slum clearance programs. Here, physical change is involved with community structure in what is generally a rather destructive manner. Methodologically, this is very similar to the problem of the impact of an expressway on the social structure of the community, even though the particular physical variables are not the same. Consequently, as many of these articles were included as could be found. Unfortunately, these were very few. However, this is the only area in which planners and social scientists seem to be working closely together, which might be indicative of a future rapprochement of the disciplines.

The Negro Migration

Doubled populations in a decade pose urgent problems for northern cities

By Eunice and George Grier

To those concerned with the future of urban housing, one of the most significant trends of the decade just closed has been the migration of large numbers of Negroes from south to north, and from rural to urban areas. With immigrants from foreign lands less numerous than formerly, these native-born Americans are now supplying northern cities with the pool of unskilled and semi-skilled labor still essential to the smooth functioning of industry and commerce, and to the continued economic advancement of residents longer established.

They are going chiefly into the central sections of the cities, where many immigrants have gone since the nation's beginning. The huge influx, combined with the rapid movement of whites outward from the urban core, and the artificially restrictive effects of racial discrimination, can have the most profound impact on urban housing patterns of the future. It is not too extreme to say that these vast population forces can wreak havoc upon any housing program undertaken without full recognition of their meaning, no matter how soundly conceived it may be in other respects.

Only the 1960 federal census, full results of which may not be available until 1962 or 1963, can tell the full story of population changes in the past decade. Yet scattered interim censuses and special analyses of vital statistics already enable us to draw many conclusions about their nature, magnitude and direction—and even to make some predictions about the future.

The current great trek of Negroes to the north began in World War II, when labor shortages and a presidential directive opened many jobs for Negroes in northern defense plants. But unlike the previous war-born migration of 1918 to 1920, which brought many cities their first substantial Negro influx, it did not slow down when the strife ended. Instead, it continued and even accelerated. The Negro population of Syracuse, New York, more than doubled in the 10-year period between 1940 and 1950. It doubled again in the 7-year period of 1950 to 1957, increasing numerically by about 4,500 persons compared to 2,500 in the previous decade.

In almost every city of the north and west where census statistics or reliable estimates are available, they tell of great—sometimes almost fantastic—growth in Negro population. New York City went from 776,000 to 981,000 nonwhites between 1950 and 1957, a gain of 205,000 or roughly 26 percent. Many others experienced greater increases in proportion to their previous Negro representation. Philadelphia is estimated by the Institute for Urban Studies to have gained 134,000 Negroes between 1950 and 1956, a growth of 36 percent over the 1950 total of 380,000. Negroes in Indianapolis increased by about the same percentage. San Diego, which saw its white population grow by almost one-third from 1950 to 1957, virtually doubled its nonwhite population during the same period.

Why They Migrate

Why do Negroes move north? In search of jobs and a better life. The contraction of employment opportunities in southern agriculture, without a corresponding opening of jobs in southern industry, has been an important impetus. They do not migrate, as some politicians have implied, chiefly with the aim of subsisting effortlessly on public welfare. Just as the Puerto Rican migration to the mainland has been found to be extremely sensitive to the availability of jobs—the 1954 recession produced a 69 percent drop—examination of vital statistics indicates that the Negro migration northward varies substantially with national and local economic conditions. By and large, though not always with perfect sureness of aim, they go where the jobs are.

While the influx to the larger cities has been more impressive numerically, the growth in many smaller jurisdictions has been much greater in proportion to their previous Negro population. This means, in essence, that the migration is spreading out. Once directed chiefly to the largest industrial areas, it is now going to many medium-sized cities as well. Rochester went from less than 4,000 Negroes in 1940 to an estimated 16,000 in 1957. San Jose, California, had a gain of 142 percent between 1950 and 1958. Newark is now over one-fourth Negro; Buffalo over one-eighth. An approximate doubling of Negro population has been a fairly common occurrence for cities in the size range of 100,000 to 500,00 during the past decade.

Observations in a number of these cities indicate that many which previously had only tiny Negro percentages are beginning to experience the growing ghettoization and the problems of housing shortage, rapid deterioration and neighborhood change long familiar to Chicago, Detroit and Philadelphia. This, then, is one of the significant consequences of the migration to date: racial problems in housing, once a virtual monopoly of the giants, have now come to the smaller cities of the nation as well.

Cities Underestimate Change

The difficulties, in fact, may be even more severe in some of these cities because the more rapid proportional expansion of their Negro population presses harder on the available housing supply. Yet it is a striking fact, confirmed in numerous interviews, that local civic and business leaders in most of these cities rarely show much awareness of the growth. They grossly underestimate both its magnitude and its implications. They take little or no account of it in their thinking about the future of their cities.

The social and economic significance of the Negro increase is by no means confined to the city boundaries, but so far the Negroes themselves have been. With few exceptions, the suburbs have been overwhelmingly successful in excluding Negroes. Of 32 jurisdictions surveyed by the Census Bureau during 1958 and 1959 in suburban portions of Cook County (Chicago), Illinois, only four had over 100 nonwhites and over 80 percent had less than 25. Quite typical of the pattern were Evergreen Park and Oak Lawn, both of which had more than doubled in size since 1950. In 1958 each contained about 22,000 whites and exactly eleven nonwhites. In a similar vein, a 1957 analysis of interim census statistics by the Philadelphia Housing Association disclosed that 10 out of 16 municipalities surveyed in suburban Philadelphia had experienced actual declines in nonwhite population since 1950. The suburbs of New York City may represent one of the few exceptions to the general trend, since here a substantial outflow of Negroes is evident. But even in this case it is confined largely to a few pockets.

Meanwhile the black belts continue to grow within the cities. In Buffalo, to give just one example, two small Negro concentrations of 1940 have expanded and joined until now the recognized "Negro area" is a large pie-shaped section which virtually bisects the city from north to south. The newcomers would go to the central districts anyway, of course, few are in a position to buy initially into suburban areas, just as were few previous immigrants of white skin. But they would seldom be permitted to do so even if their finances permitted, as some Negroes who have achieved professional standing have learned.

Usually possessing few skills and little money, the new Negro arrivals resemble most previous immigrant groups in having a far greater future potential than present capacity. Like many of their predecessors, they are often ill prepared for the complexity and cramped conditions of urban living. However, these are temporary handicaps and other newcomers have overcome them with time. Negroes have another handicap which may be more serious: the color of their skins. It forms a permanent badge of difference from the majority, not erasable by changing to more expensive clothes, acquiring a better education, or losing an accent. It makes them indefinitely vulnerable to discrimination.

This, rather than any present limitations, forms the chief reason why the increasing concentration of Negroes within the cities is of such great concern. Others in the past have started with equally few skills and low relative incomes, and they have not capsized the cities. But if continuing rapid growth of Negro populations in northern cities is accompanied by a continuance of barriers which prevent them from achieving the economic level and freedom of residence of the white majority, the consequences could be most serious.

Threat to the Suburbs

The potential effects on the tax base and upon the cities' ability to maintain and renew themselves have been discussed elsewhere, and we will note them only in passing. The attracting of a few thousand white people back to the cities through redevelopment is unlikely to solve the fiscal problem. The suburbs, of course, will not escape suffering if the cities go under; and so their present restrictive policies may eventually boomerang. The whole problem may eventually force concerted action on the regional or federal level. This much is certain: no more powerful incentive could exist for industry, labor and government to end racial discrimination than the fact that it may ultimately bankrupt the cities which are the chief source of their sustenance.

But should not the Negro population growth stabilize soon, simply because the migration dries up at its source? The influx from the south will not continue high indefinitely, whether or not restricted. Most migrations are inherently self-limiting, and this one will be no exception. The population pool in southern states from which the migrants are derived must be dwindling rapidly. The wonder may be that it has held up so long. Between 1940 and 1950, one-fourth of the total Negro population of Mississippi at the beginning of the decade left the state, and almost half of all Negroes who reached the age of 30 during the decade did so. Still, the most recent statistics we can muster do not indicate that migration is yet diminishing.

But the timing of its cessation may be of comparatively little moment. It will not reverse the prevalent trend of growth, or even halt it. It must be borne in mind that migration accounts for only part of the increase in Negro population of northern cities. A very substantial portion, varying somewhat with the city, is made up of natural increase (excess of births over deaths) in the resident Negro population. But the greater the proportional growth due to migration, the greater the natural increase also. The first generates the second. Upon this phenomenon hang certain very important implications for the future.

Birthrates Extremely High

The birthrate among Negroes in some U.S. cities today seems fantastically high. In Syracuse, for example, the Negro birthrate in 1957 was 44 per thousand. In Niagara Falls, New York, it was 50 per thousand. These rates are as high or higher than those recorded for many underdeveloped countries of the world. If the term "population explosion" has meaning anywhere, it certainly applies to many of America's cities.

These urban Negro birthrates, however, must not be confused with the birthrate for the U.S. Negro population as a whole. It is considerably higher than for whites, but considerably lower than for the cities just mentioned. In 1957, it was estimated by the Census Bureau to stand at 35 per thousand, compared to 24 per thousand for whites. The disparity between the national figure and those reported for some individual cities is due to the disproportionate number of young adults in the cities' populations.

Most migrations (with occasional significant exceptions, like the movement of retired persons to Florida and California) are made up chiefly of young people in their early childbearing years. The Negro migration follows the general rule. Thus it is that soon after the newcomers arrive at their place of intended residence, and sometimes even before, they set about the time-honored process of propagating the species. The smaller cities, with greater relative influx, have larger proportions of young adults and thus usually higher birthrates than their larger counterparts.

Population predictions are always risky, but the one which follows is safer than most: barring events of catastrophic nature, the Negro populations of most northern urban areas can be expected to rise at a rapid rate for some years to come. With Negro death rates standing around 10 or 11 per thousand, only slightly higher than white, natural increase alone will account for a rise of 3 to 4 percent per year in the Negro populations of many areas, at least until the recent arrivals leave the most fertile years. And beginning in the 1970s, these people's children will take their place in the reproductive cycle.

Not only humanity but also simple prudence demands that the cities recognize the growing needs of these Negro children for decent housing and living conditions and for equal opportunity. As the Negro populations of the cities have been increasing in fertility, the rush of whites to the suburbs has left behind a growing preponderance of white persons past childbearing age. So it is that in Philadelphia and Newark, where Negroes make up about one-fourth of the total population, one baby out of every three born alive today is Negro. In Buffalo and in New Haven, both of which are now about one-eighth Negro, the proportion among births is one in four.

In an era when it is customary for young white families to take up residence in single homes in the suburbs, increasing millions of Negro youngsters are growing up in cramped, lightless apartments and often single rooms in the central city slums. Their neighborhoods generally lack the open space, playgrounds, good schools and pleasant, safe surroundings which are the prerogative of the average white child. If juvenile delinquency is a problem today among Negro youth, it is worth reflecting a moment on what it may become in 10 or 15 years—and not just in New York and Chicago, but in New Haven, Erie and Rochester as well. Bad housing, we now know, is not the only cause of juvenile delinquency and other social problems, and good housing is not always a cure. But only a fool would claim that bad housing has a salutary effect.

The Challenge

These, then, are the chief components of the challenge which the Negro migration holds for the cities of the north: It has brought rapidly increasing Negro concentrations to almost all cities, often doubling in size within the past decade alone. Once confined mainly to the largest cities, racial problems in housing have now come to many cities in the 100,000 to 500,000 range as well. Problems may be even more pressing here because the relative growth is usually more rapid. Rigid resistance to Negroes in the suburbs, together with continuing barriers to economic equality everywhere, threaten the cities with a growing concentration of low-income people which could undermine their fiscal solvency. A continuing rapid increase in Negro population is in store for most northern urban areas for some years to come, even if migration should cease tomorrow. Because urban white birthrates are much lower than urban Negro birthrates, the proportion of Negro babies born today in the cities is startlingly high. These are facts which have profound implications for urban housing. The survival of the cities may depend on how these problems are handled.

The Negro Migration: II

Kept out of the expanding suburbs in the 1950s, minority families concentrate in central cities

By Eunice and George Grier

THE DECADE of the 1950s, which brought to this nation the greatest prosperity it or any other has known, was also a time of immense change in America's residential patterns. It was a period in which the housing stock increased about twice as fast as the number of families. In consequence, millions of families were able to undouble and acquire separate quarters for the first time. The average number of persons per occupied housing unit continued a long-term downtrend despite the postwar flood of births, and married couples without their own households decreased in number by more than half.

The 1950s were the era of the burgeoning suburbs, when the populations surrounding America's major cities grew in the aggregate by almost 50 percent—in many metropolitan areas by 75 percent or more—while the populations within many central cities actually declined. Yet the 1950s also saw the urban renewal program, after an uncertain start, pick up steam and begin the immense task of arresting the urban decay which had helped send so many millions outside city limits in their search for better housing and neighborhoods.

It was a decade in which population mobility was so great that one-fifth of the nation moved every year. Not all American families took part in this movement, of course; but so many did that the net result was a tremendous reshuffling of people and dwellings, in which most families probably acquired residences substantially better than the ones they had left.

Overall, then, the 50s were a period not only of change but of improvement in the housing of much of the population. What did these years mean for Negroes, long one of the most disadvantaged segments of the housing market? Did they bring a decline in residential segregation to accord with the often substantial progress toward desegregation in employment, public accommodations and schools? Did they mean improvement in the quality of the housing and neighborhoods where Negroes were able to live? To what extent did Negroes participate in the movement to the suburbs and into newly-constructed housing which characterized so much of the white population?

One result of the population shifts of the 1950s was to intensify a divergence in racial makeup between suburbs and central cities which had already been formidable when the decade began. By the time it ended, most major cities had registered a large growth in Negro population. Increases of 50 percent or more were common; and in such diverse and widely-separated cities as New Haven, Syracuse, Milwaukee, Dallas, Los Angeles and San Diego, Negroes approximately doubled in number in only 10 years.

The trend in the suburbs was often just the opposite. While in many cases the suburban parts of the metropolitan areas had numerical increases in Negro population during the decade, the white growth was so much greater that the net result was a decline in the Negroes' percentage of the whole. Take suburban Washington, for example. There was a modest numerical increase among Negroes in Washington's suburbs, but the white population nearly doubled. In consequence the Negro percentage of the total fell from 9 percent in 1950 to 6 percent in 1960.

From 35 to 54% in Washington

Meanwhile the city of Washington itself was experiencing a process quite common to other major cities, although the statistical outcome in Washington's case was somewhat more dramatic. The Negro population within the city increased by 134,000 persons, while the white population declined by 172,000. In consequence, the total population of the city dropped almost 5 percent—and the Negro proportion of the total increased from 35 to 54 percent, making Washington the first important city in the nation to acquire a Negro majority.

Eunice and George Grier, sociologists, wrote "The Negro Migration" in the 1960 Housing Yearbook. This article is based on the 1960 census data.

Washington Post

Eunice and George Grier of Washington, D. C.

The changes which took place in Washington and its suburbs were paralleled in varying degree in many other metropolitan areas. In the suburbs of 10 out of America's 15 largest cities, the proportional increase in Negro population during the decade was substantially smaller than the increase among whites, so that the Negro percentage declined. (The five exceptions included the three largest, New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, plus Milwaukee and Boston.) In the meantime, every one of the 15 largest experienced a great increase in Negro population within the central city.

The result, in most cases, was a growing concentration of Negroes in the city, a declining proportion within the suburbs, and a net increase in the propensity of metropolitan areas to resemble bullseyes with white rings and black centers—a tendency which was already disturbing to many students of population, housing and social problems a decade before.

Much of the Negro growth which did take place outside the central cities was concentrated within the aging, often heavily-industrialized suburbs—the Newarks, Garys and Camdens—which have little to mark them as suburban except location and relative size. Most often, too, it resulted more from an excess of births over deaths within existing Negro enclaves than from suburbanward migration. Some better-heeled Negro families did find homes for the first time in desirable suburban neighborhoods hitherto restricted almost entirely to whites, but they had little effect on the overall statistics.

Some small suburban Negro settlements which had existed for decades were wiped out during the 50s by new highways or other civic improvements. Presumably many of their inhabitants had no choice but to join the growing Negro concentrations in the central districts.

The fact that Negroes did not participate substantially in the suburban migration means that they had little access to new housing. The great bulk of new units constructed during the decade were built outside the central cities. Some new developments became available to Negroes, either on a segregated or an integrated basis. While these were unquestionably of symbolic importance, the number of units occupied by Negroes in all of them combined was relatively small, whether compared to the total number of new housing units produced or to the Negro population.

Substantial Improvements Made

Despite all this, there is every evidence that Negroes were able to make substantial improvements in their housing conditions during the 1950s. They accomplished this chiefly by succeeding to older but still good homes vacated by whites in urban neighborhoods. At the same time, urban renewal and private rehabilitation began to replace or restore to standard many of the worst units which upwardly-mobile Negro families themselves had left behind in their effort to better their housing situation.

Preliminary tabulations from the 1960 census suggest that there has been a substantial decline in the number of nonwhite-occupied units which are dilapidated or lack essential plumbing facilities. (Unfortunately, because of changes in enumeration procedures, it will never be possible to make a direct comparison between the 1950 and 1960 census housing condition statistics; improvement in condition can merely be inferred, and then only on a rough basis.) Much less uncertain are the statistics indicating that nonwhite-occupied units have increased substantially more than nonwhite families, unquestionably resulting in undoubling and reduced crowding.

Home Ownership Increased

Home ownership by Negro families also increased somewhat during the 1950s. For the nation as a whole, owner-occupied units rose from 34.9 to 38.7 percent of all units occupied by Negroes. This gain of slightly under 4 percentage points compares with a rise of 7.5 percentage points for whites, who had already owned well over half the homes in which they lived at the decade's outset. Nationally, therefore, Negroes did not do particularly well in this respect. Yet in some cities the increase in Negro home ownership was dramatic. In Philadelphia, for example, it rose from 29 percent to 44 percent between 1950 and 1956 alone, at the same time when a considerable increase was occurring in the Negro population.

But a statistical analysis is hardly necessary to demonstrate that both housing and neighborhoods of substantially improved quality were made available at least to the more fortunate Negro families through white migration to the suburbs. Germantown in Philadelphia; the Humboldt Parkway area of Buffalo; much of Washington's desirable Northwest section; the Ludlow area in Cleveland; the Ashburton neighborhood in Baltimore; the Weequahic area of Newark, New Jersey; Russell Woods in Detroit—these are typical of the established, generally good residential areas in many cities which Negroes entered in substantial numbers during the 1950s.

Many of these neighborhoods previously had been heavily Jewish. As higher-income Jews have found residential barriers against their group declining, areas where they had once been concentrated have been left to Negroes. Hand-me-downs they certainly are; and their acquisition does not in itself imply progress by Negroes toward full equality of opportunity in the housing market. But that they are much better than the neighborhoods in which many Negroes formerly lived is unquestionable.

While the housing in these areas has often reached the age where considerable maintenance is required, superficial observation indicates that this maintenance is usually being given by the new Negro residents—sometimes more reliably than by the white former owners during the years immediately preceding their departure.

The neighborhoods themselves often have much to recommend them—convenience of location, well-established trees, open space, good schools and neighborhood facilities. They are generally good place in which to raise children, in sharp contrast to the congested slums where even the more economically-secure Negro families often lived until a few years ago.

Yet they are urban neighborhoods, and herein lies a fact of great potential import for the future of the metropolitan areas. For Negro families are raising their children in the city, while white families are increasingly doing so in the suburbs. The result, as these children grow to maturity, may well be to reinforce the trends which have already gone so far toward producing predominantly Negro central cores with all-white outskirts.

Other Cities Follow Washington

While Washington is first among the nation's largest cities to acquire a Negro majority, it may not be the last. Baltimore and New Orleans, where Negroes now comprise 35 percent or more of the total population, stand about where Washington did only a decade ago. Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland and St. Louis, all more than one-fourth Negro today, have about the same racial composition as Washington did in 1940. The rising numerical strength of Negroes in the cities has had positive aspects, since it has often given them increased political strength and has put force behind their rising demand for equality of opportunity. But the emergence of entire political jurisdictions sharply differentiated on a racial basis may be something else again.

Who knows, also, whether the housing vacuum which has played such a large part in enabling Negroes to better their housing conditions—and evidently has aided to a considerable degree in reducing the general incidence of blight—will continue if the cities increasingly fill up with Negroes, while the suburbs remain almost exclusively white? Will the pressure of demand upon supply rise once more, with a resurgence of the consequent exploitation and overcrowding that contribute so much to urban decay? These ills are by no means gone from the cities today, but at least they seem to be on the wane. Will they return with a vengeance in a few years to come?

Many solutions have been ardently proposed for the problems of the urban core, and some of them are increasingly being implemented. There is considerable question, however, whether any can have permanent effect so long as racial restrictions remain widespread in the suburbs. Strenuous action to break down discriminatory barriers in suburban areas has been long in coming. Some progress toward this end has recently been made, particularly through legislation and judicial action. Much more may be imperative if the housing gains of the 1950s are to be preserved.

Urban Freeways and Social Structure– Some Problems and Proposals

MARVIN G. CLINE, Research Associate, Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies, and Assistant Professor of Psychology, University of Maryland

•THIS PAPER treats a newly identified force that those who build highways and other large-scale physical developments in congested urban areas have encountered. That force is society. Although a powerful force, its strength is transmitted through the political system in a more emotional way than land values or economic activity which are more commonly recognized. The force of society is expressed in anxieties and fears, frustration and loneliness, but also in loyalty and love. The intrinsically public decisions of highway building have already encountered these powerful forces in public hearings, in elections and referendums, in the press, and in legislative deliberations. They have effectively blocked some specific highway developments. Because the social sciences offer a way to understand these forces and to accommodate necessary public works to them, a beginning should now be made at a long, difficult, but inescapable study of social structure as it is influenced by large-scale physical changes, particularly urban expressways.

In the social world, as in the physical world, for each action there is a reaction. To the extent that reactions can be adequately anticipated, actions can be adequately planned. No better example of this proposition can be found than the planning and construction of highways. Consider the reactions or consequences of highway construction, and the precision with which they can be anticipated. The cost of moving great volumes of traffic from one point to another can be precisely established and related to the anticipated benefits accruing to the users of the highway. Further, the changes in the value of the regions connected by the highway can be estimated in advance, as can the changes in the value of the land through which the highway passes. All of these changes in value can be compared to the cost of moving traffic (land acquisition, construction, maintenance, etc.) so that a net worth of the highway can be stated in advance of its construction. Certain other effects (or impacts) can also be estimated in advance, such as the change in accessibility of some functions and institutions (schools, churches, medical facilities, recreation areas, shopping centers, etc.) which can be used to predict changes in location of residential populations. All of these consequences have been measured after the fact (2, 7, 26, 31, 33, 38, 39) and they undoubtedly have been incorporated in the decision-making processes for most of the larger highways recently constructed.

This is an admirable accomplishment. One cannot help but be impressed by the skill with which these measures have been taken, and the accuracy of the predictions made. It is to be hoped that all aspects of planning reach this level of precision before too long.

However, one gets an impression that some consequences of considerable importance may not be included in the balance sheet, and that this formula for decision-making may be lacking some critical variables. For example, a gross variable (which may be so gross that it cannot be entered into the formula) has to do with the kind of urban structure one wishes to develop. The construction of a freeway system connecting the suburban fringes with the central city may be contributing to the destruction of the central city by enhancing the dispersion of precisely those functions which are critical to the central city. That is, it is the concentration of retail, industrial, recreational, cultural, and educational functions in the central city that makes it the vital core of the whole city. The freeway system, by enhancing the dispersion of populations, may at the same time enhance the flight of many of these activities to the new outlying population centers. This can, of course, place added burdens on the freeway system in order to make the new locations of these activities more accessible. These consequences may or may not be desirable, but they are, at least at present, inadvertent. To that extent, freedom to plan in the future is being restricted by a lack of planning in the present. At the same time, if freeway planning is not integrated with more comprehensive urban planning, the freeways may become self-defeating (the more one builds, the more dispersion, the more one has to build). Hence, they become less economic (32).

However important this variable is, it is not the only one which appears not to be included in the current methods of evaluating highway plans. Another variable involved here is becoming an increasing source of political conflict and, for the transportation planner, embarrassment. This variable has to do with the reactions to the freeway on the part of the resident through whose neighborhood the freeway is to go. It is not necessary to document the rapidly growing number of instances in which irate citizens, civic organizations, and political groups are complaining about routes, interchanges, and access streets. Every transportation official must be painfully aware of the complaints arising from this ill-considered population. To date, the primary complaint has to do with the problem of relocation, but this is by no means the only significant issue.

Those who will not be removed from the path of the freeway, who will have to live with it, may shortly discover that they too have a considerable stake in the planning of urban transportation systems. These people will be challenging a critical and implicit (rather than an explicit) assumption of highway designers—the space between the points joined by a freeway is a social wasteland, devoid of human significance. This assumption is, of course, sometimes correct as in the case of purely industrial regions, or in undeveloped suburban or rural areas. Here, the only contact human beings have with the freeway is in using it for transportation purposes.

In somewhat more developed suburban regions, the assumption is still correct in a large portion of the cases, because the freeway can be effectively isolated from the residential spaces (26). However, referring to those very few impact studies which deemed it desirable to query residents' views of the freeways (and in each case, only suburban populations were queried), it is apparent that the freeway must be a considerable distance away from homes (200 to 300 ft) before those who consider it a nuisance are reduced to 25 percent of the population (39). A more developed Rhode Island residential community (6) through which a freeway was driven produced a large group of residents severely disturbed by the facility. A search of the impact literature failed to turn up a single instance in which an urban population was asked its opinion about a freeway in its midst. Nevertheless, from the data just presented, an extrapolation can easily be made. Urban residents living in greatest proximity to the freeway would have the greatest objections. These residents would present the greatest challenge to the assumption that freeways through urban areas run through social wastelands. Actually, these regions may be the locale for viable, cohesive communities, to which the residents have strong attachments. Although residents may state their objections in terms of the perceived noise, smell, and danger of the freeway, it is likely that the less obvious impact of physical disruption on the social structure will be more damaging (13, 14).

Not all residents living in close proximity to a freeway, however, will have the same kind or same degree of objections. Physical proximity is not the meaningful variable, unless it is directly coordinated to psychological proximity. Thus, residents whose use of the physical space surrounding their homes is restricted to a pathway function (streets are important only as a means of getting to or away from the home) will not be disturbed by freeway construction beyond the inconveniences of noise, smell, and danger. This is most likely to be found in highly urbane populations, living in apartment houses and oriented toward highly dispersed social spaces. These people are also likely to be high users of the freeway, and only occasional users of whatever open spaces are provided along its periphery.

Conversely, urban regions (particularly those that are most likely to be selected for freeway routes) are characterized by high concentrations of people who consider the space surrounding their homes as a living space to which they belong and in which they feel the comforts of a home. The space they are physically close to is the space to which they are psychologically attached.

A freeway traversing such a space is not traversing a social wasteland. It will be the purpose of this paper to suggest that the space and its social structure through which an urban freeway is to be constructed needs to be understood in great detail by the road designer both to avoid the harmful effects and to gain potential advantages that the freeway may have for the community.

All communities have the potential for social degeneration and blight. If the inadvertent placing of a highway helps to realize this potential, then the designer must bear the responsibility of having created more waste than a society can afford. On the other hand, if the highway can aid the community in acquiring some of the conditions of life that it values, then the designer is equally at fault if he does not discover how to produce these consequences. The time has long past when the luxury of a hit or miss approach to social planning can be afforded.

THE CITY AS A SOCIAL SYSTEM

The traditional view of the city includes a picture of the lonely, lost urban dweller, cut off from the norms and expectations of the small but stable village community, forced to lose his personal identity, and sinking in a sea of depression. This view of the nature of city life has persisted for some time, and was most recently elaborated on by Louis Wirth (40). This theorist was aware that not all urban residents were contemplating suicide. Some of them were establishing with their fellow residents very real interpersonal relations that had the character of true community behavior. But Wirth attributed this to a residual of rural living, so that right or wrong, he was again denying the city a capacity for spontaneously generating social support for its residents.

More recently social scientists have been taking a hard look at urban structure, using new and more sophisticated techniques (3, 4, 12, 22, 29). These investigators are now arriving at a rather different view. It is apparent that urban regions produce a wide variety of social structures and populations. Even the lowest income areas can generate integral systems of living that supply their residents with a good deal of personal satisfaction, a sense of neighborhood, identification with physical region, and a great reluctance to give up residence even with the inducement of better housing. These systems of living appear to vary according to the economic status of the families, the degree of family integration, and the degree of "urbanism" of the neighborhood (an index based on measures of the fertility of the families, rates of females employed, and the number of families living in single-family housing units). For example, lower-income urban groups tend to have a great reliance on their family and extended family for their informal relation (4) and they prefer to use the local economic, service, and recreational facilities of the neighborhood (17). Komarovsky found that urban dwellers have rather low (25 percent and lower as status decreases) rates of membership in voluntary associations (27). At the same time, it has been noted by several investigators (3, 5, 10, 12, 15) that, as there is less formal structure in the more urbanized community, there is an increase in the rate of informal "friendship" contact between local residents. Even when the contacts are based on formal role structures such as consumer-storekeeper relations, a significantly high proportion of the urban residents (particularly the lower-income groups) prefer to transform the relationship into a personalized, informal state of affairs (37). Lower status shoppers prefer to shop in smaller community stores where they were known by name and where informal relations with the store personnel could be established. The author does not mention the availability of credit buying in the local food store which must also be an important factor in shaping the preferences of these buyers. It can be concluded that the lower-income neighborhood can be an extended and complex social network involving geographically localized friends and relatives, many informal groups, and strong attachments to the community. Clearly, significant proportions of the urban population are on intimate terms with their immediately surrounding physical and social environment.

Also, positive feelings toward the neighborhood often develop despite inadequate housing facilities. Behind the slum lies not social chaos but a strong, satisfying community. This is an important point because it indicates the degree to which the residents of these neighborhoods are willing to tolerate difficulties in order to maintain the primary social relations of the community. Apparently this is a phenomenon present in many groups living in a satisfying social system despite generally inadequate housing. An interesting example of this can be found in the classic study of Festinger, Schachter, and Back (16) of a housing project built by Massachusetts Institute of Technology for married veteran students. The development consisted of U-shaped courts of from 8 to 13 single or semi-detached houses in each. The experimenters were interested in relating the physical features of the courts (the distance between houses and the direction in which a house faced) with the kind and rate of social interactions observed. For various reasons, the residents of these courts were generally very favorably impressed with life in the project. Very few expressed any desire to leave, more than one-half were vigorous in their statements that they would not consider leaving the project at all. Friendship rates were quite high, as were the rates of informal contact. This general satisfaction existed in spite of, and seemed to compensate for, many physical inadequacies of the houses. For example, at the time of the study, many of the houses had trouble with the roof so that moderate winds could raise them and allow rain to pour down the walls. The adequate and satisfying social life was sufficient to override these inconveniences. The authors report that the typical reaction was "Oh yes, there are many things wrong with these houses, but we love it here and wouldn't want to move."

Not all physically devilitated areas have such viable social structures within them, of course, but it ought not to be necessary to argue that the knowledge of the social system through which a freeway is to go is an important datum for those who plan and decide. This is all the more true when one considers that the attachment to the physical environs is probably greater among the lower-income groups than other strata, and that these groups live in areas most likely to be earmarked for freeway construction. That is, low-income areas appear to be the preferred places to locate urban freeways. The point of the present discussion is to warn highway planners to distinguish between slum-blighted areas, and low-cost areas. Seeley (36) has suggested a critical psychosocial distinction between them: the slum is an area in which there are pathological consequences for the residents wrought by the physical and social character of the neighborhood; i.e., the true blighted area. The low-cost area may be almost indistinguishable from the slum in terms of its physical facade, but it is a place whose physical inconveniences the residents will accept in order to gain the benefits of either low rent or the social satisfactions resulting from a sense of belongingness. This is a vital distinction, and one which the highway designer must recognize if he is to avoid making serious planning errors.

PSYCHOLOGICAL IMPACT OF PHYSICAL DISRUPTION

There have been few studies of low-income areas disrupted by large-scale physical change. No studies have yet been done in which the source of the physical disruption is the construction of a freeway. But one important study of the effects of an urban renewal program is brilliantly suggestive of the issues that must be resolved.

This series of papers describes the residents of the West End Section of Boston and their reactions to the destruction of the neighborhoods, mistakenly identified as a slum, and thus cleared. Fried (19), Fried and Gleicher (20), and Gans (21) describe the intense attachment of the residents to their neighborhood. This is the first study to establish the focus of positive loyalty to physical places (specific stores, houses, streets, etc.) as much as to the social environment of relatives and friends. The authors use the term "localism" to describe this kind of attachment to a space. It refers to a space that has the qualities of home but at the same time is public space in the sense that it is used by all residents for their various purposes. It may be thought of as an extension of home, with all the values of home. In the eyes of those to whom it is home, it is thus a space to live in rather than to pass through. It is typically composed of streets, hallways, roofs, alleys, stoops, and the fronts of stores.

Such a public space is the medium for the interaction of a great variety of people and functions. In this situation complex and intricate social systems develop. The physical aspect of the space is the framework on which the social systems are built. Although the authors limit this phenomenon to lower-income areas of high density, there is no doubt that other highly used spaces will generate social systems and the development of a strong sense of belongingness on the part of the resident of the space.

Disruption of the physical space has the potential of striking at the very foundations of the resident's sense of psychological well-being. When the residents of the West End were forced out, many of them exhibited what Fried (19) has likened to the clinical syndrome of grief. A depression similar to the experiences one has at the loss of a loved one seems to have persisted in some cases over a period of years. It should not be difficult to imagine that residents who continue to live in an area that has received such a crushing psychological blow will develop negative feelings about the eviscerated area. And it is the feelings that the residents have for their neighborhood which are the most important determinant of the social and economic value of the area. Social disorganization almost inevitably results in physical and economic disorganization, which ordinarily can be expected to spread to adjacent areas.

Hartman (24), in describing further the West Enders, reports an interesting method of estimating resident's reactions to generally shabby and in some instances dilapidated building conditions: an index of the physical condition of the tenants' apartments was constructed and compared to an index of the physical condition of the building. Surprisingly, almost one-third of the apartments were in considerably better condition than the buildings. Evidence that the residents devoted a good deal of care and attention to their apartments, despite the shabbiness of the general environment, should alert even the casual observer to question whether the usual objective criteria of substandard living can be appropriately applied in this case.

PHYSICAL DISRUPTION AND SOCIAL FUNCTIONING

There is a more immediate problem than that of the pervasive impact an urban freeway may have on a viable community: the effects on the surrounding area. The impact studies have little or nothing to say of this problem outside of describing the change in economic and population characteristics of the area. The few studies in which residents were asked their opinions of the freeway are largely irrelevant to this problem because it is apparent that physical spaces occupied by the freeways in these instances were not significant psychological spaces to the residents (26, 39).

One study by the Blair Associates (6) documents a point made by Wilfred Owen (32, p. 51): "The highway . . . can disrupt a neighborhood by thrusting itself between houses and recreational land, or between houses and schools." Blair Associates report that the highway removed four playgrounds, raised costs for police and fire protection because of the extra distances they had to travel, reduced the number of houses in the community by one-third, and increased the time it took the children to travel to school.

The implication of these points is that the highway is seen as a gap or a gash through the community and serves to separate people from each other and from the important facilities of the neighborhood. On the other hand, the gap itself has special characteristics, some of which have recently been described by two observers of the social and visual characteristics of urban space. First, Kevin Lynch, in an extremely insightful description of the visual qualities of the city (30) defines a sharp perceptual change in the layout of a city as an edge. This is an area that separates two regions, marking a sharp change in the characteristics of the regions on either side of the edge. There may or may not be the means to penetrate the edge from one side to the other. If such means exist, the edge becomes a seam, "a line of exchange along which two areas are sewn together." If such means do not exist, the edge is perceived as a barrier that serves to halt rather than enhance social functioning. A busy street, railroad tracks, an expressway, are all examples of barriers, whereas a park, accessible from both sides, can serve as a seam. Lynch's point is that the edge is perceptible as a barrier or a seam and will therefore serve to control behavior. Barriers will in effect repel and seams may attract.

In a similar analysis, Jane Jacobs, describes what she calls a border vacuum (25, ch. 14). Mrs. Jacobs places the emphasis on the functional rather than the visual properties of a region, and argues that when the functions that a region supports are curtailed, its utility is reduced. This in turn leads to still less use and consequently to the creation of a vacuum. A vacuum is used only by those who prefer it; i.e., those who wish to remain unseen or uncontrolled, such as criminals.

Mrs. Jacobs applies this concept to city streets that have had functions removed (e.g., streets along the edge of high-rise apartments and projects that are used only as paths), parks that offer only nonfunctional grass or asphalt walks, and stores with limited functioning (e.g., banks which close early in the afternoon). These are interesting speculations because they suggest a dimension of community space that might be causally related to the social integration of the community, and therefore related to the degree of personal satisfaction and community commitment of the residents of the area.

This analysis can be applied to the construction of large shopping centers where single-function impulse-buying shops are placed between two large multifunctional "magnets." This is necessary because few people venture very far from the highly active magnets, and this number decreases as the distance from the magnet increases. Single-purpose stores at the end of a line of stores in a shopping center apparently have a tendency to fail, whereas identical stores in the midst of the flow of buyers between centers of activity apparently thrive.

This might also be applied to a typical urban area cut by a limited-access freeway; for example, an intersection of streets in such an area before construction. Retail shops are located for a number of blocks along both sides of one street which runs perpendicular to the residential streets. Such an intersection is likely to be an active and populated subregion of the neighborhood throughout the better part of both the day and night. This is the magnet of the neighborhood, the social and economic center which is so popular that the traffic flow may not serve as a barrier between the four sides of the intersection. When this microcosm is replaced with a limited-access freeway, the consequence is not merely the reduction of population, business activity, and housing. The magnets that drew people and money to the region are gone. Multifunctions have been replaced by single-function streets. Activity suddenly halts a few hundred feet from the freeway and remains dormant until one reaches a few hundred feet beyond the other side of the freeway. Even a street that turns into a bridge across the freeway is a socially empty and useless object because its only purpose is to move cars away from the area. There is no reason to go to the intersection except to travel through it, or, because it is devoid of activity, to hide. Such an area becomes, in Lynch's terms, an edge, or in Jacobs' terms, a vacuum. In any terminology, it has become a negative place, quite capable of rapid degeneration.

CONCLUSIONS AND PROPOSALS

There are three major sources of negative consequences resulting from locating a freeway in the midst of an urban area: (a) the freeway may disrupt the physical framework on which the community is built; (b) the freeway may create a border vacuum capable of rapid degeneration; and (c) the freeway may serve to separate the residents from each other and from the important institutions and facilities of the neighborhood. These consequences are in respect to the residents who remain in the immediately surrounding environment and do not include the consequence of relocation of those who live and work in the path of the facility. These are both long- and short-term consequences and may not be easily identifiable by the residents themselves. However, they may be sources of serious unrest and discontent, long and costly public hearings and delay.

It would be appropriate to make some proposals at this point in order to achieve a level of constructive criticism. The psychosocial structures through which the freeways are to go need to be seriously considered in planning the facility, and such consideration will lead to improved, acceptable designs. The following are therefore proposed:

1. If some of the freeways that have been built in urban areas are examined the variety of communities through which they have been placed may be noted and the range of consequences that have been produced may be imagined. It is not necessary to be a sophisticated observer of the social scene to estimate where and what kinds of disruptions of social functions have taken place. It is possible to increase one's sensitivity to the social requirements of communities by simply looking.

2. Some social science research should be included in present plans. Sociological and social psychological methods for measuring social structure are sophisticated enough at present to allow for an adequate before-and-after experimental design (1, 18, 23, 29). Both experimental and statistical techniques are available so that the contribution of a freeway to social change can be reasonably distinguished from most other factors contributing to the change. In other words, the concept of an impact study needs to be expanded. Parallel studies are needed in the social psychological disciplines, similar to those in the economic and demographic disciplines. Until the psychosocial consequences of actions are known, the environment cannot be fully controlled.

3. Before a freeway is built, its locale should be studied with respect to some of the following: (a) the social boundaries of the communities involved; (b) the major social needs of the residents; (c) the important social functions carried out in the neighborhood; and (d) the critical spaces within which these functions and needs operate. Above all, these should be done in cooperation with the residents.

With these data, it will be possible to minimize the disruptions at least because meaningful criteria of route location will be established. Equally important, however, is that it becomes possible, with these data, to identify the necessary disruptions in advance, and to plan for their reduction before they are created. For example, these data can suggest where and how the community must be shielded from the freeway. They can also suggest in advance which functions of the community are most in need of maintenance. Thus, if a highly used space is to be cut by the freeway, then it is apparent that the facilities for these uses should be recreated as part of the freeway structure, with easy accessibility for all residents. The roadbed might be sunken, in this case, and the functions (retail buying, recreational activities, restaurants and bars, etc.) placed on top of the freeway. This could also act as a bridge between the two sides of the road. In this manner, those critical magnets could continue to hold the neighborhood together. Without this support, such a community could easily begin to die.

WASHINGTON AS A STARTING POINT

Remarks to the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Architects, at a luncheon meeting January 15, 1963, The Mayflower Hotel by Frederick Gutheim, Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies.

To open your series of luncheon meetings on changing Washington I would like to survey briefly where we stand now. Change is an opportunity to progress, to improve, to perfect. Of itself it is neither good nor bad. The addition of new architecture, whether in a crowded city center or in the suburbs on vacant land, changes what we have now. If it does not actually destroy existing buildings, it modifies them. Let us commence, then by recognizing that we are concerned with the city as a whole, with recognizing the values it now has, and with preserving and enhancing these values. The problem is one of urban continuity. In later programs of this series you will be considering proposals for changing parts of the city, or with individual building projects. Let me aspire therefore to providing a strong general framework that may embrace these later more specialized discussions, and not attempt to cram them all into one short talk of twenty minutes.

The nature of the city of Washington, as I attempted to say in the special issue of the Journal of the American Institute of Architects this month, is specifically responsive to such regional factors as climate and geography, to a long and distinguished history as the capital of a large and growing nation, and the national cultural heritage expressed here in terms of architecture and monuments. We have today, as throughout the past, two Washingtons. They may be characterized as a Washington expressive of the nation and its interest, a white and monumental city, a city reflecting government functions and Federal affluence. The other Washington is the local river town on the Potomac, the vernacular city, with its slums and parking lots, its drab strings of shops along thoroughfares, its monotonous suburban housing developments and its unimaginative and depressingly ordinary commercial buildings. Often one is tempted to emphasize and exaggerate this division. It would solve many problems. This was the theme of the proposal for local governmental reform and home rule offered by Prof. Roy Franchino, who suggested a truly Federal city of much smaller and concentrated character, lying south of Pennsylvania Avenue, within which Federal buildings and activities would be concentrated, and Federal authority would be supreme.* The remainder of the District of Columbia would be retroceded to Maryland, as Arlington County was retroceded to Virginia in 1846. If the political infeasibility of this proposal strikes you, then let me suggest its architectural feasibility is equally dubious.

As a start, then, I offer the idea that we cannot talk about Washington, even the image of Washington the nation sees, simply in terms of Federal buildings, Federal activities, Federal interests or Federal decisions. We must consider the whole Washington, vernacular as well as formal, local as well as national, metropolitan as well as District. We must consider how the two Washingtons relate and interact, how one needs the other and can strengthen the other, and how these relationships should inform our city planning, our urban design and the design of individual buildings.

To those of us who have lived here a long time it may appear that Washington is losing its individuality among cities. But this distinctive identity is too fundamentally established, in the very plan of the city, in the national expectation of it, and in its architectural heritage to be easily lost. Like Paris, it abounds in odd-shaped sites for buildings, not only shaped in curves or like pairs of pants, but facing open spaces, and inviting reciprocal relations with other buildings. In the architecture we have inherited you can find one example at least of every past style and revival from the earliest days, and there would have been more had we not torn down so many of them. Some are of great national value, like Renwick's design for the old Smithsonian building, which started the Gothic revival; like that pinnacle of the Egyptian revival, the Washington obelisk; like the Lincoln Memorial, the apogee of academic classicism; or, one predicts, Dulles Airport, the purest example of structural expressionism. But many others illustrate merely the contemporary architectural idiom, especially in residential and commercial building, those categories of architecture in which originality is most cheaply bought and least durably maintained. It is these in which Washington seems a more typical American city - although there are few cities in which our architectural past is so evenly and so profusely illustrated and none in which the challenge to do the fashionable thing in an exemplary way has been so persistent. As a national showcase Washington has had for nearly the whole of its history the power more briefly possessed by New York's successively abandoned commercial districts, residential Nob Hill or Chicago's Gold Coast in the period before the adoption of the graduated income tax ended ostentation, or even today's midtown office building boom in Manhattan: the power of arousing a higher expectation of quality in design because it was subject to higher critical standards as a national and international center of attraction. Finally, we must recognize as a source of individuality in Washington building design today its heritage of past architecture which steadily challenges us today. If we criticise the new Senate and House office buildings, it is in terms of the earlier design of the Capitol. The design of Lafayette Square must be measured by no less a standard than the White House itself.

Architecture inWashington, I suggest, owes its individuality to the powerful and controlling influence of a distinctive plan, rooted in the architecture of illusion, and the sites it offers today's designers; in the national expectation that buildings in Washington must be measured not alone against the best in town, but against the best anywhere; and the expectation that what we here build takes its place in history, and will be measured against not only the heritage of a notable past but against the best the future holds. We are called upon to excel as are the architects of no other American city.

The pursuit of excellence is perhaps too demanding. Certainly in reviewing that special issue on Washington of the Journal of the A.I.A. it is hard to be impressed by the buildings of Washington today. More to the point of these remarks, they do not add up to an impressive architectural image of a great city, one that projects a contemporary architecture across the land as powerfully as it does the image of the monumental traditional city. Yet that is our task; to make a Washington that satisfies more than the tourist's expectation.

Two aspects of the contemporary city may be distinguished. In the congested center, redevelopment provides one set of opportunities. In the suburbs other steps may be taken to redeem the newly built areas from the humdrum character they so readily assume. Let me discuss each very briefly.

Central city change is inevitable as the city's central functions change to accommodate a vastly larger population. Given our height limits, which I believe should be retained; and assuming, as I do, continued centrality; then we must count on a rather larger area into which the new white collar industry and its office building must be located, the so-called "confrontation industry" which cannot move to the suburbs. The services of the central city are required by this office building population, by the specialized requirements of the entire metropolitan area, and by the rapidly increasing number of visitors; and this is the aggregate population which supports the cultural activity of the central city. If this city is different from midtown Manhattan, the Loop in Chicago, or other "downtowns" I suggest it is because of the individualizing influences I have earlier mentioned, together with the combination of Federal and private office buildings (and they have grown almost indistinguishable), and the intermixture of the open spaces of monuments and parks with their tourists with the daily life of the city. These ingredients we must organize in larger and more significant units of design. The rebuilding opportunity created by slum clearance and urban renewal, by the construction of new expressways and transit facilities, the replacement of obsolescent commercial buildings by new and more efficient offices and stores - these are the elements at our disposal. They are also the forces of vitality for the future city, which will generate still further changes. Yet as I look at such districts as H Street in the vicinity of 17th, or lower Connecticut Avenue, or K Street west of 15th, or 17th Street below M, districts in which there are many excellent individual buildings, it is clear we are building buildings, not cities. Each building has its own parking facility, to take one instance, when planning might have saved thousands of dollars and provided far greater efficiency by encouraging collective provision of parking. With so much uniformity and monotony of facades, surely there is a case for architectural design control that would be absent in areas of less building activity. The relations between individual buildings, their recognition of each other, the use of minor open space to punctuate uniform facades, arcades, even the set-backs which those skyscrapers of soap and whiskey empires have made famous, are lacking. The public space itself must respond to the higher densities, building heights, new functions and other changes in such areas as around Farragut or McPherson squares. But these changes are only a start, and I cannot linger to discuss what I hope you will consider more fully later in this series of talks.

In the suburbs the uniformity of residential subdivisions, schools and shopping centers is still the curse. Nothing is large enough, high enough, or important enough to create a focal point. It is still a bleary picture where, as Gertrude Stein said of Oakland, "there is no there there." A church, a library, a school never achieves the status of a community institution. It always seems a branch of something else - somewhere. It seems most comfortable when alone in a quiet wood, like Keyes and Belluschi's Cedar Lane Unitarian Church, our best single suburban building. In the commercial strips provided by our county planners, the shopping centers are hardly more than neon-lit gasoline alleys set back a bit from the highways. Again, it is not the individual buildings that invite criticism but their failure to add up, to form larger and more coherent aggregations, to express the strength of community, to stand out from the overwhelming monotony and drabness of suburbia everywhere. I do not think the designers of the new Arlington library, or its YMCA could do much about Arlington itself with their individual buildings, any more than the architects of the new county buildings in Rockville or Hyattsville could. A larger effort of a different sort is needed. The principal hope for the larger suburban package is the diversified free-standing community on the Reston model, supported by variable density zoning, and expressing the clearly stated requirements of 75,000 people or more. This idea is now pretty well established and I think we have seen the last of the wholly residential developments like Belair, but we have not yet resolved the new design problems, either as planning or as architecture.

Washington as a national capital has its distinctive image, and it is a unique one. But as the fastest growing large city in eastern United States it should be offering suggestions and receiving them from Texas and California, Florida and the Northwest coast, and the sun country of the southwest. These other rapidly growing areas are making their own mistakes, but development requirements have made them realize more clearly than I believe we do yet the need to project a clear, individual urban image to the nation as a whole.

That image of the city, when we get it and project it, cannot be that merely of the better American city; and I hope it will not be the Federal image of a city of bureaucracy, impersonal, ordinary and timid. It must be the more ideal image of the City of Man, the city of opportunity, the city which having devastated the countryside, having attracted its population from the nation and the world, has made good its pledge to provide the good life.

STATEMENT OF

MRS. KATHRYN H. STONE

VICE CHAIRMAN, COMMISSION ON HUMAN RESOURCES,

WASHINGTON CENTER FOR METROPOLITAN STUDIES,

CONFERENCE ON EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

D. C. ADVISORY COMMITTEE

FEBRUARY 27-28, 1963

The Commission on Human Resources, now two years old, is a constituent agency of the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies. The Commission consists of twenty-one representative citizens of the District of Columbia and adjacent areas of Maryland and Virginia.

The Commission was formed in the realization that more than ever before, the economic growth and community well-being of this metropolitan area as a whole depend upon the development of human resources -- through such means as education, training, guidance, broadened employment opportunities, and improved housing and health -- and in the belief that the future belongs to those communities which make the maximum investment in people -- in particular to its youth. The Commission has asked a number of leading experts on human resources, manpower utilization, and other urgent current problems to contribute their insight to the Center itself and to the Washington community. Among them have been Dr. Eli Ginzberg, Judge Mary Kohler, Dr. Philip Hauser, Dr. Daniel Schreiber, and Mr. Philip Stoddard Brown. The Washington Center has published some of their contributions in a series of human resources pamphlets, which I am appending to this testimony for the use of your Commission.

The Commission on Human Resources also mobilized support from key organizations in the Washington Area interested in the training or employment of skilled personnel for an Area Skills Survey, to determine the needs and availability of skilled workers in the area. This Survey is now being completed by the United States Employment Service for the District of Columbia, with the aid of a technical advisory panel assembled by the Commission.

Concurrently, the Commission, with the aid of general funds supplied by the Washington Center, has sponsored a study of the career-seeking experiences of graduates of a leading Washington high school. This pilot study, now being completed by Mrs. Eunice Grier of the Center's staff, delves more deeply into the career obstacles confronting young people of minority groups than any other of which we have knowledge.

Neither the Area Skills Survey nor the experience survey of high school graduates is yet ready for release, although we expect both to be available within a few weeks. Mrs. Grier will present a small portion of the preliminary findings of the high school study today, however. I can only say at this point that we expect the final results of both studies to provide important guidelines for action efforts. In some cases, we believe that they will suggest whole new avenues of approach to more effective manpower utilization for the benefit of all Washington Area residents.

During the next few months, this Commission has set itself the task of drawing together the significant threads in all these contributions to knowledge; and drawing both upon these factual sources and upon the Commission's own broad fund of experience, formulating a comprehensive set of recommendations for the improved training and utilization of this area's youth. While this task is still in process, I would like to share with you some of our preliminary thinking.

The Commission on Human Resources holds the point of view that it is necessary to develop the full human potential of a community to have a prosperous economy and to develop a sense of community well-being. Here in the District of Columbia we have ignored too long the full development of more than half of our human resources. When training is not given, or when it goes unused, a deteriorating process sets in. Such human beings become a drag on the economy and a social liability. The costs of ignoring the development of each individual to his maximum and making a place for him in our economy is probably the largest single economic cost which our community now bears.

Basic to the whole problem is the fact that no group which has not been allowed to have a full sense of participation in the culture can, overnight, be assimilated into the dominant culture. Our problem is to see to it that Negroes come to have a sense of belonging, a clearer knowledge of opportunities, and confidence that proper preparation for skilled and professional work will be rewarded in the economy.

But what do we now find? You will hear from Mrs. Grier a discouraging account of the employment experiences of Negro youth who did stay in school and did complete their high school education. Our community does not offer young men training beyond high school at costs which they can afford to pay. (In a few cases, the armed services have supplied this). Our community does not offer them trial work experiences of any value in helping them find one of the newer careers open in laboratories, data processing, and the other occupations with rising opportunity. The public employment service plays only a small role in job placement.

The result of these factors has been that young men of considerable aptitude and promise, in many cases, drop through accidental means, into the age-old community pattern where the Negro does the menial work and finds little encouragement or chance to fully use his capabilities, while the economy is confronted with the anomaly of youth drifting while jobs of a higher order go begging. This amounts to an enormous wastage which our economy needlessly bears.

The Commission on Human Resources, as a result of a considerable amount of study, plus our own observations and experiences, wants at this time to make six recommendations with respect to the employment future of young people now in our high schools.

1. High school teachers and counselors should be made more aware of the full range of employment opportunities in our economy today, and how entry into a greater variety of occupations can be made, in order to transmit this information to their students and reflect it in educational activities. Employers in the community, and business and labor organizations, should develop programs in cooperation with the schools to acquaint high school students with career opportunities and the preparation required.

New occupations and occupations in which trained workers are in short supply should be especially stressed in such informational programs. Field trips to enable young people to see the work going on in such newer areas as research and development, computer programming, data analysis, and other technical fields would greatly extend the horizons for youth in planning future careers. Negro youth could see Negroes at work in a variety of skilled occupations.

2. Within a few weeks the "Skill Survey of the Washington Metropolitan Area" will be publicly released, and from this important study we may expect to gain more accurate facts about the skills needed in our economy and which skills are in short supply. It is important that educators, business and labor leaders, and citizens become acquainted with the findings of this survey and take steps to prepare our growing pool of young manpower for the opportunities available.

3. Local colleges and universities, and perhaps some community agencies as well, should turn more attention to students who drop out of college, or whose college training is interrupted. Better counseling and guidance, scholarship aid and other incentives should be developed to help students select fields in which they have some aptitude and encourage them to complete their preparation. The college drop-out represents wasted human potential in an economy with constantly rising job requirements.

4. Trial work experiences, through summer or part-time jobs, or in full time internships, are needed. Experimentation with such programs, possibly with some subsidy, is in order. Young people need more opportunities to explore vocational possibilities. The Employment Service and business and labor leaders should cooperate in the development of programs which afford these trial work experiences.

5. Ways must be found to encourage young people to register at the Employment Service and benefit from the counseling which is there available. This counseling must be constantly strengthened by the addition of more professional career counselors, and its offices decentralized and made more available.

6. The armed forces, which can and sometimes do play a considerable role in the preparation of young men for jobs, needs to become much more aware of the effect of its training on our economy. While serving their own purposes, it is quite possible for the armed services to serve our whole economy better. This is, of course, a subject which needs to be pursued on a national basis.

Our closing observation is that the community which encourages young people to complete their high school courses has not done enough. Further responsibility for training and education, further need for counseling and guidance, a real need for meaningful trial work experiences are indicated in our complicated and rapidly changing economy. We must stay with Negro youth beyond the high school if they are to be prevented from drifting into the menial, blind-alley jobs traditionally open to them. We have not begun to utilize the human potential of our Negro youth. Mrs. Grier's picture of what happens to some of the more promising and more persistent of these youth should spur us to action. This is a community-wide challenge and opportunity.

U. S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

FEBRUARY 27-28, 1963

My testimony today is based on one phase of a study recently completed for the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies. The full study will be released for public distribution some time next month.

Briefly, this study was a pilot exploration of the career-seeking experiences of a selected group of Negro high school graduates in the District of Columbia. The sample consisted of all male members of the Class of 1956 from one academic high school who could be located five years after their graduation.

There were many aspects of the results which may be of some interest to educators, guidance counsellors and others concerned with the welfare of youth. But I think the findings of most direct interest to your Commission probably deal with the experience of these youth in seeking employment in jobs suited to their interests and capabilities. With your permission, I shall confine myself to this topic.

First of all, I think I should emphasize that the school in question was during their attendance devoted largely to preparing youth for college. For many years it had been widely regarded as one of the finest high schools for Negroes in the District of Columbia and, in fact, in the nation. A number of its graduates are now in positions of fame and responsibility. In general, the student body of this school consisted of youth deemed to be capable of pursuing college training. I think this fact bears significantly upon the import of the findings about their work experience.

There were forty-six young men in the sample. All but one of them had had at least some work experience following high school graduation. At the time they were contacted, during the summer and fall of 1961, most were gainfully employed. Twenty-five were working full time, and ten more were employed either in part-time or summer jobs. Eight, however, were unemployed; and all but one of these were actively looking for work. The unemployed amounted to eighteen percent of the total sample, a surprisingly high proportion for an area which has an unemployment rate substantially below that for the nation as a whole.

Of the twenty-five who had full time jobs, only three were working in positions closely related to their present career aspirations. One was a commercial artist, and two were electronic technicians. The rest viewed themselves as merely marking time until they were able to fulfill their true ambitions. This, I might point out, was five years after their graduation from high school, when they had reached a median age of twenty-three years.

Since their graduation from high school, the young men studied had held among them a total of fifty-six full time jobs. Some of these jobs were used chiefly as a means for building up cash reserves to aid in their pursuit of college training. But they were not part-time or temporary in nature. Most of these full time jobs fell into two broad occupational categories: clerical and service. Almost all of the twenty-four clerical positions were in governmental agencies; and they were heavily concentrated in the U. S. Postal Service. Nineteen of the full time jobs were in service occupations, and most of these were distinctly menial in character. For example, five were as dishwashers, four as porters, and three as bus boys. One of the youths had worked as an unskilled laborer, and four as operatives: cab drivers, parking lot attendants, etc.

The median income reported for these full time jobs was about $70 weekly. The high was $100, and the low was $25. Had it not been that a substantial proportion of the positions were with the Federal Government, the average would have been much lower. Most of the service jobs paid $1.00 per hour, and occasionally even less. All these youth, I would note again, were high school graduates, and many had some college training.

The part-time and summer jobs, which had been held by these young men mostly with an aim to obtaining funds for college, were about on a par with the full time jobs -- except that fewer of them were with government. They provided little in the way of useful experience which could be applied to later career opportunities. The pay was generally low in accord with the low-skilled nature of the work so that after deducting living expenses, it is doubtful that many of the youth were able to build up any sizeable bankroll against college expenses.

I might state at this point that little of the evidence obtained in this study was directly indicative of job discrimination in the District of Columbia, but the total pattern of these young men's experiences certainly raises serious questions. It is hard to understand how such a group of high school graduates, many of them with some college, could possibly have built up such an overwhelmingly unimpressive list of job experiences, unless something other than their own personal inadequacies were holding them back. While in this study we were unable to study the experiences of a comparable sample of white youth, I think there is little doubt that such a sample would have shown a substantially broader range of job experiences in terms of occupations, employers and salary levels.

We asked the young men how they had obtained each of the jobs they had held, and I think that the findings in this respect may also be of some interest. Overall, by far the most important source of referrals was a relative or friend, usually a person who worked for the same employer or was a personal friend of the employer. Almost half the jobs were found in this way. Eleven of the jobs were obtained by a door-to-door canvass of employers believed to have openings. Civil Service Examinations, of course, were an important route to jobs in the Federal government. Newspaper want ads led to only seven jobs; private employment agencies provided only five.

It is well known that personal contacts furnished by relatives or friends are one of the most frequent sources of job opportunities for the population as a whole. But there is good reason to question whether such channels as newspaper want ads and private employment agencies are as unimportant a source for white job applicants as they were for these Negro job seekers.

The heavy reliance upon relatives and friends among the youth we studied meant, of course, referrals predominantly by persons who themselves were Negro. Many of them were of an older generation. To the extent that they themselves had been restricted in their job advancement as a result of direct discrimination or of inadequate educational preparation, their own disadvantages would tend to be reflected in the opportunities of the youth they advised. In this way, of course, past discrimination may have cast its shadow on the present generation.

Yet the results of the study do not support the conclusion that this was all that operated to hamper the youth in question in achieving their full potential. It was evident from the interviews that a number had deliberately avoided approaching employers who were not known to have a non-discriminatory policy. To some degree they may have been restricting their own horizons in an effort to avoid the humiliation of a racial rebuff. On the other hand, a number of the young men did not restrict their job explorations in this way. Their overall employment experiences did not differ significantly from the rest. Some reported seeking employment for weeks or months without any success. While they could seldom point to a rejection on the clearly stated basis of their race, there were a number of instances where they suspected that a white applicant of similar capabilities would have been hired. One, for example, reported being told that the personnel office had run out of application forms, yet seeing a white person who entered immediately afterward being given one. Another reported that the application forms given to whites and Negroes seemed to differ in some of the firms he contacted.

These, of course, are scattered experiences reported at secondhand, and they hardly constitute definitive evidence of discrimination. Even if they did, they would be of significance only with respect to the particular firms involved and would indicate little or nothing with regard to a general phenomenon. Much more significant, I think, is the total pattern of job experiences reported by the forty-six graduates of a good high school contacted in this study. This pattern is a discouraging one at best, and it is very difficult to explain it on the basis of personal inadequacies. Perhaps one of the most revealing findings of the entire study was this one: only two of the youth reported that they had ever been promoted on the job.

HUMAN NEEDS AND PUBLIC POLICY IN URBAN DEVELOPMENT*

GEORGE GRIER and EUNICE GRIER
Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies, Washington, D.C.

Governmental agencies established to guide the use of increasingly scarce urban land must reconcile economic, legal and technological considerations with the physical, social and psychological needs of its ultimate users. Often public programs for urban improvement come a cropper due to inadequate recognition of human factors. The challenge to psychiatrists and behavioral scientists is discussed.

THE HUMAN environment of the future is being built today, and it is increasingly urban in character. During the last census decade, the combined population of America's metropolitan areas increased by 24 million—about seven-eights of the nation's total population growth. Land around major cities is being gobbled up at a ferocious rate—in many metropolitan areas, over twice as fast as the increase in their population.

More and more the design of the urban environment is becoming a matter of public policy. Over the past several decades the growth of public planning agencies has been rapid, and the development and redevelopment of urban areas is increasingly subject to various kinds of governmental involvement.

Mistakes in planning were less important when the scale of urban development was smaller and its pace less rapid. Today whole communities housing thousands of people are frequently planned, built and occupied within a few years. Every indication is that both pace and scale will accelerate in the future. Inadequate urban planning can have very large and serious consequences under these conditions. And with the trend toward increasing public control, the power and responsibility for adequate planning devolves more and more upon the public and its representatives.

This prospect poses a challenge to the behavioral sciences. For they alone are equipped with the skills required to develop sound information about human characteristics, needs and preferences upon which valid plans for the human environment of the future can be based. This capacity carries with it a public responsibility. It is a heavy charge, for a careful examination will disclose many instances in which present-day plans for urban development fall distressingly short in their attention to human factors.

Those who plan the urban environment are neither better nor worse, overall, than the rest of us, and their decisions can hardly be better than the information used in formulating them. Planners receive information of various kinds, and of varying degrees of perfection; the available evidence suggests that within their human limits they try to use what they get effectively.

Among the most influential information inputs to the planning process are those dealing with political and legal realities. The planner must take cognizance of what is politically feasible, meaning that he must be sensitive to the reactions of the electorate and the power structure. He must also take account of legal limitations—especially our system of private land tenure, under which broad public control over the use of land is difficult. While planning agencies are usually governmental or quasi-governmental in nature, their contact with the general public is normally indirect. The political and legal inputs to the planning process are mediated chiefly by elected officials, legislators and government lawyers.

Another input to the planner's decision-making process is economic. He must consider land and construction costs, both of which have spiraled upward. He must assess the ability and willingness of the market to bear the cost of the things he plans, either through direct payments or tax dollars. Economic considerations dictate a hard-headed attitude toward anything that cannot be justified by solid data on the needs or demands of the potential human users. The economic inputs are chiefly mediated by land economists and cost accountants.

Still another input of great importance to urban planning decisions today is technological. So new, so manifold and so exciting are the possibilities of modern technology that the planner finds it difficult to keep up with the sheer flood of information provided him by the physical sciences and engineering disciplines. These matters may sometimes distract him from other considerations of at least equal importance.

Properly, the urban planner should get information on the environmental needs of human beings from the physiological and behavioral scientists. Physiologists have given him some valuable data, but he gets little information in usable form from the behavioral sciences, and the results often reflect the lack. Although behavioral scientists do know some things that could be of use to the planner, the knowledge has seldom been available in a form he could readily use. Because he must consider so many disparate factors, the planner has no time to translate data presented in terms foreign to his methods of operation.

Most of the planner's information on human needs, therefore, comes to him strained through the multiple sieves of the political process. What he gets through these sources is usually imprecise, frequently conflicting and often reflective of the power struggles and vociferations of poorly informed pressure groups. It is stuff of the surface and of the moment—hardly suitable as raw material in deciding the form of an environment that may have to stand for 50 years or more. Still, it is the best he has. If he looks for something more solid and satisfying from the behavioral sciences, he will usually seek in vain.

Because he obtains so little information directly, the planner's view of human factors often tends to be colored by the source. For example, he tends to see certain social problems in their political guise. Negroes, he recognizes, are increasingly demanding better housing; but the white majority is still the stronger, and its prejudice is still high. These opposing political forces must be recognized in his planning.

Other social problems tend to be viewed as chiefly economic. Poor people, for instance, are people who cannot afford decent housing in the private market. Thus the planner must provide housing for them with the aid of subsidy. Poor people are seldom viewed as people with problems that prevent their functioning well without special assistance and support from the environment, many of whom might even become self-sufficient if they received this assistance in adequate amounts. They are simply poor people.

Even fairly universal needs may be overlooked simply because they are not brought decisively to the planner's attention, or because he does not receive sufficient information to justify incorporating them in the face of other pressures. Thus, such obvious needs as schools, shopping and recreation have often been granted inadequate attention.

Under these circumstances, there have been increasing instances of late in which the plans formulated by public agencies have come a cropper because of failure to deal adequately with human needs. The following example is dramatically illustrative.

This is the case of a huge residential development that had literally to be evacuated and converted to use by another population because it was so completely inadequate for the needs of the kinds of families who lived in it. It was a low-rent housing project, subsidized by tax funds and designed and built by publicly controlled bodies.

The errors in this instance were chiefly those of total omission rather than faulty provision. Furthermore, the human needs neglected here were neither so subtle nor intangible as to be difficult to quantify or predict. They included such basic requirements as food supply, cleanliness and reasonable protection against bodily injury. How could anyone leave these out of a plan for a human environment? That they were ignored in this instance indicates the danger in leaving the human factor to chance.

Let us call this housing project Hell's Gate, a name which vaguely resembles the real one and is certainly descriptive. Its location was a northeastern city on a large body of water.

Hell's Gate was built in a small decayed pocket of the waterfront district with an infamous history of social disorder. Its planners sought to wipe out this pocket of blight and corruption and to provide a social and architectural cornerstone for eventual redevelopment of the entire waterfront area, which had been ruined by clumsy industrial development in an era when there was virtually no planning.

The project was built in the early 1950s. It consisted of 600-plus units in seven buildings of 12 stories each, closely spaced on nine acres of land. Physically they were imposing: a phalanx of jutting towers against the sky. Less obvious from superficial view, they concentrated the population of a good-sized village, 3,000 persons, in a location almost totally devoid of the facilities and services such a village would require.

The site was separated from the rest of the city by an elevated superhighway. To obtain access, its residents were forced to pass through a labyrinth of huge columns, whose dark crevices afforded a near-perfect shelter for persons with unsavory purposes. On foot, an able-bodied man might well avoid this path in broad daylight. A woman, especially after dark, was courting real danger. Even if she passed this obstacle safely she had another half-mile or more to walk to shopping and community facilities. Eventually, the city expected to provide such facilities closer by as part of the waterfront redevelopment program; but this was only vaguely in the offing when Hell's Gate was ready for occupancy.

The more than 600 families that the city's Housing Authority moved into Hell's Gate averaged five people; many were substantially larger. About half the project's population consisted of children under 15 years of age. Most of the families were Negro, being heavily composed of relocatees from another area then in process of redevelopment. A disproportionate number suffered from social problems, because the pressure to remove families from the renewal area caused the Authority to place in Hell's Gate many who had proved impossible to relocate elsewhere.

For two years after the project was opened, there were no shopping facilities of any kind on the site. Neither was any transit service provided. Even purchase of a loaf of bread required a major shopping expedition. Eventually, space was made available in the basement of one building for a small grocery store, still inadequate to the need. Considerably later a single bus line was routed into the project. Again this was a minimal improvement; the bus had infrequent schedules and required transfers to get to most parts of town. Few Hell's Gate residents, of course, could afford cars.

Families with small children must launder frequently. The only laundry facility in Hell's Gate consisted of a commercial laundromat with ten coin-operated washers and four driers. It was located in the basement of one of the buildings, and not a centrally located building at that. A woman with several small children might trudge down to the laundromat, either dragging her brood behind her or leaving them to their own devices back in the apartment—only to find all the washers in use and a waiting line as well. Most families preferred to do their wash in their apartments, even though the sinks were too small and getting the clothes dry was an enterprise.

The opening of the public housing project more than quadrupled the school-age population in the immediate area. But the existing public and parochial schools had to absorb the burden. Built many years before, they were already obsolete and overcrowded before the project was constructed.

Child care facilities and services are of special importance to large low-income families, but virtually none were provided in or near Hell's Gate. Neither of the elementary schools serving it had a playground. Nor was much outdoor play space provided on the project site; seven tall buildings squeezed onto nine acres simply do not leave room for that sort of thing. Eventually the city built a makeshift playground on an adjacent piece of vacant land eventually intended for other purposes. It was unsupervised, dirty and equipped with a few decrepit slides and swings in one corner. One ball game involving a dozen children would use up the remaining space.

For each acre of land in Hell's Gate, including buildings, there were 180 children under 15. On any clear day, youngsters of all ages could be observed wandering aimlessly looking for something to do. On rainy days there was no place to play outside the apartments themselves.

Organized recreational and social service facilities were almost totally inaccessible. There were no voluntary social agencies in the immediate area, and the churches were not equipped either financially or otherwise to fill the void. The people of Hell's Gate, with their heavy burden of problems, were left to face these problems alone.

The results were dramatic. Almost from initial occupancy, Hell's Gate was riddled with tenant dissatisfaction, tension and disorder frequently erupting into violence. Vandalism was rife, much of it caused by youngsters with no supervision and nothing constructive to do. It was difficult from the outset to get white families, even those of low income, to accept a situation as barren as Hell's Gate. But the Housing Authority, committed to a policy of racial integration, persuaded some to move in at first. They moved out, and the project soon became entirely Negro-occupied.

The reputation of Hell's Gate quickly spread. Soon only Negroes in desperate straits would accept assignment there. Events in the project became juicy meat for the daily press. Matters became so bad the city hired a private detective agency to police the place around the clock.

Belated efforts to remedy the project's shortcomings as a living environment were inadequate at best. The space and funds required for the necessary facilities and services had not been in the original plans, and efforts to supply them later produced only minimal improvement. The rest of the waterfront redevelopment program had not materialized.

Somehow, Hell's Gate limped along for about six years. Eventually, however, it became evident that it was a threat to many of the city's plans. Its continuing problems had become a potent weapon for the opponents of public housing and urban renewal. The decision was made to sell the project for private ownership and to evict all its low-income residents.

All considered, this was probably a wise decision. Although they faced some further stress in moving, many of the tenants were relocated to another site more accessible to community facilities. Presumably, the middle-income private tenants who replaced them did not suffer as much from the project's locational disadvantages. They needed fewer facilities and services, and most owned cars or could afford taxis.

Probably it is seldom that as many errors of omission and commission are made in the planning of any residential community for human needs. Moreover, the marvelous adaptability of human beings makes it possible for most people to adjust to many inadequacies. This is probably the main reason we do not have many more Hell's Gates.

This adjustment is not achieved without cost, however. The human costs of misplanned physical environment—whether they be in increased incidence of physical and mental illness, time and energy sacrificed to tension and psychosomatic symptons, or simple wasted effort and discomfort—deserve to be considered in computing the total expense to the community. If this were done, doubtless the economic criteria by which the planner operates would be revised substantially. In Hell's Gate the mistakes were a few too many and the people affected by them were among the less adaptable members of the society; in consequence the structure failed completely.

Many of the mistakes in planning Hell's Gate may seem all too obvious to behavioral scientists. This knowledge does not convey the right to point the finger of scorn. Where were behavioral scientists when the planners were making their mistakes? What did they have to offer the planners that would be of use?

The answers to both of these questions, unfortunately, would have to be negative. First, few behavioral scientists were in the vicinity. Most were absorbed in pursuits of more interest to them, sometimes in studying the problems of societies as far removed as possible from America's urban slums. Second, even the behavioral science knowledge that was of potential value in the planners' work was not in a form suited to their immediate use. Political, legal, economic and technological inputs were all available to those who planned Hell's Gate. Behavioral science inputs were not.

The political and legal inputs told the planners such things as these: Land is difficult to obtain for public housing; this particular site is politically available; there are no legal obstacles to its acquisition; eventually the city will be ready and willing to redevelop the whole waterfront, but politically and legally it is impossible to start now. This particular blighted piece can be cleared immediately, and public housing is a feasible means of doing so. Besides, there will be an urgent need to relocate the Negroes now living on another projected clearance site and this site will not arouse community prejudices.

The economic inputs said this: The cost of clearing and redeveloping this land will be high, and in order to keep the public subsidy within permissible bounds it will be necessary to achieve very high densities. (The population density in Hell's Gate, after occupancy, was about 225,000 people per square mile, a high figure by any standard.) There will not be room for "frills."

The technological inputs told the planners: Materials and techniques are readily available to build the structures to house these many people on this land. Tall as they must be, and facing a waterfront with high winds, the structures will have to be stressed heavily for wind resistance; thus the foundations should be so thick and steel beams of such-and-such a strength should be inserted every so many feet.

The behavioral sciences furnished the planners nothing of similar concreteness and precision. They might well have raised questions at the outset about the feasibility of concentrating this many large, low-income families, many with social problems, in a location so isolated from the rest of the community.

But if the decision still stood, the behavioral sciences might have told the planners: Very well, then, you must provide certain facilities to serve these people's human needs. For example, they will require these kinds of shopping facilities, in these minimal amounts. Second, you must provide so many thousand square feet of playspace. It should be supervised by one person to every so many children, and it should have such-and-such facilities. Third, this many large families will need so much in the way of laundry facilities, convenient to the dwellings—preferably where the mothers can wash and dry clothes within sight or hearing of the children, as middle-class mothers usually can do.

For low-income families, furthermore, the school facilities and personnel should be augmented beyond the level required by an equivalent increase in middle-class children, since these children will not receive as much support from the home environment. It will be necessary also to provide a variety of special services of a supportive and counseling nature.

The behavioral sciences should have strongly pressed this basic point: A housing development large enough to house 3,000 people cannot be conceived in terms of shelter alone. It must be conceived as a total community, and all the needs of its residents must be capable of being satisfied within an accessible range of its boundaries, if not within them. Facilities and services must be planned in terms of the kinds of people to be housed. Old people need certain things; young, large families need others. All these things must be ready when the families move in.

The behavioral sciences should also have been able to specify, in considerable detail, the physical relationship of living units that would make for the highest level of constructive interaction among families, minimizing tension and conflict and enabling them to aid each other in a neighborly way.

And, since the chief identifying characteristic of a true science is its ability to predict, the behavioral scientists should have used prediction as a bargaining tool. They should have been able to state, based upon extensive evidence, that, if the needs of people were so totally ignored in Hell's Gate, the ultimate costs would be far greater than the "savings."

This guidance, furthermore, should have been available to the planners and designers of Hell's Gate not only through consultation, requiring that they first recognize their own need for it and specifically request it. It should have been published in a manual that could repose on their bookshelves, to be reached for in much the same fashion as they would reach for the engineering manuals for the necessary bracing for a floor in a multistory building.

Some may argue that many of these things are a matter of common sense, and planners should not need to be told them. But if they require detailed instructions on how to fireproof a building, then they equally require instructions on how to protect a community against the fires of human discontent and tension created by environment. If they require data on the size of pipes and heating plant necessary to provide a building with enough hot water for the needs of its occupants, then they equally require data on minimal requirements for laundry, food supply and recreation facilities.

Some may contend that it demeans the dignity of the behavioral sciences to be concerned with some of these simple matters. Who else is equipped to provide it? Some physiologists, a few years ago, did not consider it beneath their dignity to measure the buttocks of thousands of human beings to determine the best dimensions and shapes for seating. The result has been a quiet revolution in the design of seats for cars, airplanes, offices and even homes—a benefit that has literally been felt by all of us. How often have behavioral scientists had comparable impact on the human environment?

Some may point out that the task of measuring the social and psychological needs of human beings is complicated by their great flexibility and variability. These make the task more difficult. But they do not necessarily render it impossible. In engineering terms, human beings would be considered a highly elastic material with great tensile strength, capable of being fabricated in a very wide range of sizes, shapes, colors and abilities. There are similarly versatile materials in the realm of the physical sciences—particularly some of the new alloys and plastics. The good qualities of these materials have not deterred the determination of the environments in which their properties may be used to the fullest and the limits beyond which they no longer perform well.

If a human being is stretched far enough, he will break; if compressed enough, like the people of Hell's Gate, he will scream, suffer and flail around, and he may never recover fully from the ill treatment. The correct question, of course, is not how far one can stretch or compress a human, but how one can build an environment in which he will be most happy and function at his highest human level.

Some may feel that present knowledge is not sufficiently precise to enable such determinations. True, much remains to be learned. But behavioral scientists have not focused sufficiently what they do know. And they have perhaps been too hesitant to express it in concrete terms. Engineering indexes are often rough approximations, and even high-grade metals vary in quality. Thus, engineering criteria contain a fairly large built-in margin for error. Still, on occasion a bridge or a dam will come apart under stress. This has not deterred engineers from building more bridges, or physical scientists from deriving indexes and specifications for materials and techniques. Behavioral scientists can afford a few mistakes of their own, in the interest of eventually reducing the volume of mistakes now being made without their intervention.

Having set forth the challenge, we must now indicate some of the steps we believe necessary to meet it:

1. Compilation of a handbook of specifications for the design of human communities, based upon the best current behavioral science knowledge. Perhaps many of the specifications will have to be derived, at the outset, through consensus among a highly qualified group. Many will be very approximate; some may even be informed guesswork. Successive refinements can then be made on the basis of experience in application. The important thing is to get a start, recognizing that the task will be a continuing one.

2. Systematic experimentation and observation in actual housing situations. In almost every year since World War II, this nation has built over one million units of new housing. Had only one-tenth of one per cent been allocated for systematic experimentation in community design, with careful monitoring and evaluation by behavioral scientists, there would now be thousands of units of living experiments. Nor would their residents or developers necessarily lose out in the process. Most such experiments, based on hypotheses derived from current knowledge, would probably result in environments superior to those produced otherwise.

It is not too late to begin. Many more millions of homes will be built in the next decade. Further, much can be learned by examining the housing that already exists, even though little if any of it meets the qualifications for a good experiment. Among the existing stock of dwellings in this nation there are almost infinite variations of internal and external arrangement.

Why not conduct comparative studies into the daily living patterns of selected samples of families of varying characteristics residing in different environments? Sample design would present problems, of course, as would the development of adequate instruments. But these are chiefly technical obstacles. As such they complicate the task, but they are not insuperable.

How much time is wasted by different kinds of families, for example, because of physical design ill-matched to each one's needs? How much of the total time of large, low-income families is devoted to doing the family wash in the absence of adequate washing facilities; and how much wash never gets done because time runs out? How do elderly couples fare, in comparison to younger families with children, in equivalent housing units? A careful examination into the budgetary patterns of these same families would be interesting also. How much do they spend on the "hidden costs" of failing to provide facilities and services where and when needed? These are only a few of the questions of great importance to community design and planning, which have often been asked, but never answered. There are many questions, too, about the best design of communities to minimize tensions and facilitate constructive social interaction. A few scattered studies have suggested the potential of scientific inquiry into this topic, but the surface has barely been scratched.

3. Development of closer working relationships between behavioral scientists and those who make planning decisions. They could learn much from each other. Just as physical scientists and applications engineers have joined hands toward common goals in our current technological revolution, so too the efforts of behavioral scientists and urban design practitioners need to be merged in the greater interests of an increasingly urban society. Formalized arrangements are necessary to assure this; it will not come about by accident.

While the planners generally obtain their basic training on university campuses, behavioral scientists less frequently have the chance to observe at first hand the problems of the planners. Thus, their work often lacks realistic orientation. A program of internships for behavioral scientists in planning and development agencies could yield many benefits in professional development.

Will the behavioral sciences respond to the challenge now presented to man's well-being by the burgeoning metropolitan complexes, where at least three-fourths of America's population will probably reside in less than two decades? If so, the results could be infinitely rewarding. If not, they may well be disastrous.

GEORGE AND EUNICE GRIER

Obstacles to Desegregation in America's Urban Areas

At no previous time in its history has so much world attention been focused upon the United States' long-standing propensity to segregate and deny equal rights to the Negroes in its population. Never before, either, has that nation itself indicated such great interest in alleviating these same problems: a concern increasingly expressed in judicial and legislative measures as well as in citizen protest. Over the past two decades changes in both law and opinion, together with their consequences in public and private behaviour, have been both sweeping and dramatic—expecially in contrast to the relative inactivity of previous periods.

The changes are based not only upon recognition by the white majority public of the injustices to those victimised by discrimination, nor even upon the increasingly vocal protests of the disadvantaged minority. To a growing degree they are grounded in a knowledge of the danger widespread racial inequities pose to the welfare of the entire nation. This danger itself stems chiefly from certain large demographic trends. These trends, with their implications in the social, political and economic spheres, are only now being grasped by much of the country's informed leadership.

Only a few years ago, racial problems were granted almost no mention in connection with public policy at the level of either national or local government. Among officials both elected and appointed, the tendency was generally to deny that race was a relevant factor in the operation of their programmes. Today, race is accorded frequent and increasingly frank attention in governmental planning and action of many varieties: in urban renewal and relocation; in welfare and employment policies; in commercial and industrial development; in public education; and even in discussions relating to governmental structure and taxing powers.

Recent Population Shifts

In the mid-1950s, a few scholars began to identify and to explore the significance of large population shifts within the expanding metropolitan areas* which contain about two-thirds of the United States' population. In particular, they noted very sizeable increases in the non-white populations of the central core districts of these areas and a concurrent movement of whites towards the suburbs. Their words went largely unheeded in the general reluctance to discuss race—until the decennial Federal Census of 1960 confirmed all they had said and added other facts which further increased the reasons for concern.

The 1960 census showed that between 1950 and 1960 every one of the nation's fifteen largest metropolitan areas registered increases in its Negro population exceeding the concurrent growth in white populations. Ten of the fifteen experienced actual declines in the total populations of their central cities although their suburbs usually expanded immensely. In every case, whether or not the central-city population declined, the number of Negroes in that population increased substantially. As may be seen from the table on page 5, the result, without exception, was a dramatic proportional increase among Negroes within America's major cities.

In the city of New York, for example, the Negro population increased by 46 per cent over the decade; in Chicago by 65 per cent; in Philadelphia by 41 per cent; in Washington, D.C., by 47 per cent; in Los Angeles by 96 per cent; in Milwaukee by 187 per cent. These examples serve to indicate the general magnitude and scope of the changes, but such increases were not confined merely to the largest cities. They were felt throughout many of the smaller metropolitan areas in the nation as well.

Today, Negroes make up over half the population of Washington, D.C., the capital city of the United States. They constitute more than one-third of the residents of Baltimore and New Orleans; over one-fourth of those residing in Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, and St. Louis; and more than one-fifth of the citizens of Chicago and Houston. In a growing number of cities Negroes are found in greater proportion than the approximately 10 per cent they comprise of the nation as a whole. Within these cities, they are generally concentrated in limited areas, predominantly the poorest sections.

Consequences for Government Policy

Negroes' generally lower incomes, their frequently deprived educational and cultural backgrounds, their tendency toward a disproportionate incidence of social and health difficulties—all these matters press with increasing force upon the governmental responsibilities of the cities in which they reside. At the same time their growing numerical dominance tends to reduce the financial and leadership resources available to cope with these same problems. The problems are largely a product of discriminatory practices in the past, but they pose large and puzzling obstacles to the present elimination of these inequalities—obstacles exacerbated by the sheer weight of large numbers.

*By the U.S. Census Bureau's definition, a 'metropolitan area' consists of an incorporated city of 50,000 or more plus the suburb counties which in combination with it constitute a 'social and economic whole'. There were 212 such areas in 1960.

Growing civic consciousness of the problems associated with racial inequality and separation comes at a time when the problems themselves have reached a critical level—a level at which efforts to deal with them must necessarily be very large. America has lived complacently with segregation and discrimination for so many generations that effects have becomes causes. And the interrelationships of cause and effect have been heaped one upon the other until they produce a complex, intertwined situation which defies simple solutions.

One dramatic illustration is seen in recent conflicts over public education. The concentration of culturally deprived Negro children in particular neighbourhood schools produces an educational environment that makes it difficult to provide the services needed to overcome their deprivation and to place them on an equal footing with their white contemporaries. One proposed solution has been to disperse the less-advantaged Negro children to better schools at present under-utilised, through extensive bus transport programmes. This approach has met with strenuous resistance from many parents (usually white but sometimes including Negroes of somewhat higher economic position), whose children live in better neighbourhoods and attend better schools.

At the same time, Negro parents in deprived areas of several major cities have undertaken mass 'boycotts' aimed at obtaining better school conditions in their own neighbourhoods. The ability of the schools to provide these improvements is severely limited by the general strain upon the taxing powers of municipal governments created by the recent movement of large numbers of better-paid white citizens to the suburbs. For the suburbs are administratively separate and do not contribute financially to the needs of the cities.

Difficulties of strikingly similar nature have been raised by the extensive urban renewal programmes recently undertaken by many American cities. Because Negroes tend to be concentrated in the decaying central districts, a considerable majority of families displaced from their homes under renewal programmes have been Negro. Some pro-civil-rights groups have criticised urban renewal as 'Negro removals'. And this is what renewal must inevitably be in many cases, regardless of the motivations involved—if for no other reason than that the geographic coincidence of Negroes and poor housing makes it so.

The relocation of large numbers of low-income Negro families from slum areas to neighbourhoods which are substantially better in quality, but are usually within a mile or less of those being renewed, produces another kind of repercussion. White residents of these neighbourhoods frequently go into racial panic and move out; so often do Negro residents who have attained a somewhat more secure economic status, producing spreading waves of racial change. The tendency of low-income displacees to become congregated in neighbourhoods adjacent to those under renewal as a consequence both of their own locational preference and of the panic of existing residents, is too often to lower the quality of these adjoining neighbourhoods and perhaps to create additional candidates for renewal in the near future. The decline of these neighbourhoods is probably due only in part to the characteristics of the displacees. Of at least equal importance, probably, is the disruptive effect of rapid population change, which demolishes the social structure and social controls of many such areas, and encourages the entry of real estate speculators and others of dubious civic worth.

At the root of most such problems is residential segregation. The more even dispersion of Negroes throughout the metropolitan areas not only would reduce the concentration of problems, but would immensely increase the resources available to deal with them.

Unfortunately, the elimination of residential segregation poses staggering difficulties. There have been growing efforts to abolish racial discrimination in the provision of housing. One of the most recent of these was an Executive Order signed at the end of 1962 by the late President Kennedy, and affecting all new housing produced with Federal assistance. (In the United States this is a minor proportion of the total housing supply, but an important source nonetheless.) About a quarter of the fifty States, including many of the largest, had previously enacted laws to the same effect, some of them with much broader coverage. Enforcement of such measures to date has often been slow, cumbersome, and uneven; much discrimination remains. But even were this not so, the legislation is still too little and too late to do the job alone.

Were all discrimination in housing in the United States to end tomorrow, unlikely as this prospect might be, the problem of segregation would still loom nearly as large as ever. A year later, perhaps even a decade later, there would still be one or at most a few neighbourhoods in each American city where most of its Negro residents reside. And in these neighbourhoods, a white person would himself experience the uncomfortable feeling of being in a minority among those who do not like or trust him.

At the same time, one would be able to drive through block after block of the extensive suburban development accomplished since World War II without once encountering a Negro other than occasional domestics. In the border zone between heavily-black core areas and heavily-white suburbs one would often encounter, as one does today, neighbourhoods which were racially mixed. Some would apparently be stable at least for the time being. Others would be in rapid transition.

Population dynamics which are in major part a product of past discrimination and enforced segregation have now become causes in themselves, contributing to the maintenance and even to the further increase of segregated residential patterns.

The Racially Exclusive Suburbs

One of the principal reasons is the almost wholly-white character of recent suburb expansion. Fed by housing needs accumulated over two decades of depression and war, as well as by liberal home mortgages guaranteed by the Federal Government, development of new housing in the United States proceeded at a very rapid pace in the years following World War II. Most of the new housing was built in the suburbs, for there was little vacant land remaining within most of the central cities.

Between 1950 and 1960 nearly two-thirds of the nation's total population increase took place in the suburbs of its metropolitan areas. The growth in Philadelphia's suburban population, for example, was forty-six per cent. Suburban Chicago grew by seventy per cent. The suburbs of Washington, D.C., increased in population by eighty-five per cent; suburban Cleveland by sixty-five per cent.

But it was general policy in new residential development to exclude Negroes from residence. Virtually no publicly-subsidised low-rent housing was produced in the new communities. The relatively small numbers of Negroes who would have been able to pay the price of housing produced under auspices other than governmental were refused admittance by the great majority of private developers.

The exclusion of Negroes was generally concurred in by the lending interests which supplied the mortgages, by the white families who comprised the bulk of the market, and by the Federal Government itself. Until about 1950 official underwriting manuals of the U.S. Federal Housing Administration contained bluntly worded instructions to refuse governmental mortgage insurance to properties in racially mixed areas, or at least to offer insurance on lesser amounts than were requested. Those who sought to challenge these injunctions felt the weight of Federal disapproval. For example, two development co-operatives which admitted Negroes to their membership in the late 1940s were put out of business by the persistent refusal of the U.S. Federal Housing Administration to guarantee their mortgages; similar organisations which did not include Negroes were granted mortgage insurance. Recent Federal prohibitions, then, represent outright reversal of a discriminatory governmental policy, and not enforcement of one which had previously been equalitarian in principle.

The combination of population forces and both public and private policies had dramatic consequences. Some suburban jurisdictions actually lost Negro population as long-established Negro enclaves were displaced by all-white development. Even where small increases occurred they were swamped out by the white migration. Almost universally, the already small percentages of Negroes within the suburbs of most major cities declined as the Negro proportions within the cities rose.

In Montgomery County, Maryland—an affluent suburb of Washinton, D.C.—the total population grew from 164,000 to 341,000 in ten years. Negroes remained a scant 12,000 people. For the Washington suburbs as a whole, the Negro proportion decreased from about nine per cent to six per cent in ten years.

Negro Increase Within the Cities

Within the same brief interval, Negro representation within the city of Washington itself rose from 35 to 54 per cent. Ironically, the proportion of Negroes in the entire Washington metropolitan area increased by an insignificant amount during the same period. As it had since 1920, it remained virtually stable at about a quarter of the whole. The changing colour distribution was almost entirely a product of segregated residential patterns, operating within the context of rapid metropolitan increase in both colour groups.

While the changes produced in the Washington area were more dramatic than in many others, the same trends were repeated with varying sharpness across the United States. Apart from suburban exclusion, the most important factor involved was Negro population increase within the central cities. This increase, in turn, was a product of two factors, migration and natural increase, generally in about equal proportions.

In terms of numbers, the largest increases occurred in the biggest cities, and particularly in those which previously had substantial Negro concentrations. Among the States, New York now has the largest Negro population of any in the nation. This is the first time in history that the lead in Negro population has been held by a northern State. In 1950 five southern States—Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas—all had more Negroes than New York.

Although the largest municipalities generally registered the largest numerical gains, the largest proportional increases in Negro population were recorded by medium-sized cities in the 100,000–500,000 range. In cities such as Syracuse and Rochester in New York, San Diego (California) and Fort Wayne (Indiana) Negro populations approximately doubled in the ten years from 1950 to 1960.

Migration and Natural Increase as Contributors to Growing Negro Concentration

The migration which has contributed to these statistics is part of a larger pattern, In recent years, there has been large-scale population movement both from the centre of the United States towards the boundaries (especially to the sea coasts and to the Great Lakes Region), and from south to north. This migration, most expert sources agree, has been both 'pulled' and 'pushed'. It has been 'pulled' by the job opportunities and manifold attractions of the major cities, especially those located on the fringes of the nation. It has been 'pushed' by shrinking labour needs in agriculture, particularly in the depressed portions of the rural south.

Whites and Negroes have shared in this movement. Both migrant groups have been chiefly low-skilled. The whites, however, have been more readily absorbed into the society and economy of the urban-industrial complexes. The Negroes more often have ended up as semi-permanent inhabitants of central city slums.

Some have thought that measures to discourage the migration would contribute toward solving the problems created by race in the urban centres. This has been the spoken or unspoken philosophy behind a variety of restrictive measures, including stringent qualifications for welfare aid, which have recently been enforced in many parts of the United States. Many are essentially anti-Negro measures. At this point, however, it would make relatively little difference to the trends of the future were the cityward movement of Negroes to cease tomorrow.

In many cities, at least half the Negro increase during the 1950s came from babies born in these cities, rather than from new in-migrants. In cities like Buffalo, N.Y. and New Haven, Connecticut, where about one-eighth of the population is now Negro, one-fourth of all babies born are Negro. Such disproportionately high Negro birth rates stem from a variety of factors. One is the exceptional youth of the Negro population, partly due to differentials in longevity but augmented in recent years by thousands of in-migrants in the most fertile ages.

The fertility ratios* of Negroes, as computed from Census statistics, are often higher than those of whites in the same metropolitan areas, but not to a degree sufficient to account for the difference in birth rates. The concentration of Negroes in the principal childbearing age brackets leads to many more births. Another factor in differential birth rates within the cities is the unusual structure of the white urban population; since the white movement to the suburbs has consisted heavily of young families with children, the remaining white inhabitants are heavily weighted with single people and with people above the age of childbearing. In Washington D.C., half the remaining whites in 1960 were over forty.

The consequences are clear: no matter what the future changes in migration, potential exists for continuing rapid increase in the

*By the definition employed by the U. S. Bureau of the Census, the 'fertility ratio' is the ratio of number of children under 5 per 1000 women aged 15 to 50 at the time the Census is taken. This statistic avoids many of the misleading attributes of the birthrate, which is computed on the basis of the entire population regardless of sex or age.

Negro populations of many American cities. Negro children in large numbers are now growing to adulthood there, and soon will add their own contribution to the birth rate. Meanwhile, the white populations of the same central cities are dying off, their capacity to reproduce themselves undermined by the selective migration of their younger age groups to the suburbs.

Out in the suburbs, of course, the whites also are having children in explosive numbers; in fact, a comparison of fertility ratios in metropolitan Washington showed that white residents in some of the more recently developed suburbs have substantially higher fertility than the Negro population of the city of Washington.[1]

The large-scale shifts of the post-World War II period have, therefore, built into the population structures of America's metropolitan areas the potential for further changes in the same direction. Washington D.C., is the first major American city to reach a Negro majority. But by 1980 at the latest, unless very powerful forces should intervene, there will probably be several other large cities in the same situation. Baltimore, Cleveland, Detroit, New Orleans, Philadelphia, and St. Louis are all leading prospects. Baltimore and New Orleans already have Negro proportions as great as Washington's in 1950; the others are not far behind.

The Economic Differential

A possible deterrent to the further expansion of heavily-Negro areas would be the large-scale dispersion of Negroes into the suburbs. From the legal standpoint, most of the obstacles to such a migration have now been removed. A 1948 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court destroyed the legal foundation of racial restrictive covenants by which residents previously could and often did band together to keep Negroes (as well as other racial and religious minorities such as Orientals and Jews) out of their neighbourhoods. Such agreements may still be made privately, but violators can no longer be punished by fines and jail sentences. Effectively, this means that any used house is available to Negroes, provided only that its owner is willing to sell or rent to them. Now, the Presidential Order of 1962 prohibits discrimination in new Federally-assisted housing, most of which is in the suburbs; and some States have laws of considerably broader coverage.

Yet with legal barriers lowered, economic differentials between the races remain a major obstacle. Because of past and present inequities in education and employment, Negroes today have markedly lower incomes than whites. For the combined urban areas of the U.S., the median family income of Negroes in 1959 (the most recent available statistic) was under 60 per cent of the white median. During the 1950s the economic gap between whites and Negroes actually widened in terms of both monetary income and real purchasing power.

Nonetheless, since this was a period of general rise in incomes and living standards, Negroes made substantial advances. In Chicago, for example, there was a more than tenfold increase in the number of Negro families with annual incomes over $6,000. Many more thus came within the effective market for suburban private housing, for which $6,000 is generally about the lower limit. But those who can afford it are still in a minority. In most urban areas of the northern U.S., not more than one in four Negro families earned total incomes exceeding $6,000 in 1959. And many of these achieved their income only through the efforts of two or more wage-earners—a fact which often disqualifies them for mortgage credit since working wives under forty frequently are not considered a reliable source of income by lenders and governmental insuring agencies.

The obstacles presented to effective desegregation by differences in income are reflected in recent experience, although economics is not the sole factor involved. Not only is the potential suburban market among the Negroes limited, but its needs have often been satisfied in good older housing left behind by whites leaving the central cities.

While chronic housing shortages have long plagued the Negro populations of many American cities, this situation was largely remedied during the 1950s for the more fortunate members of the group. A recent careful study of ten major cities in the midwestern portion of the United States showed no substantial backlog of non-white demand for owner-occupied units in seven of the ten.[2] This does not mean that shortages have disappeared in housing priced within easy reach of the large numbers of non-whites who cannot afford to purchase in the private market. For such families the need is often acute, and it is not being satisfied by the meagre programme of publicly-subsidised low-rent housing now in force in the United States.

But it does mean that most of the economically self-sufficient members of the Negro population no longer suffer acute housing need. Just how well their demands in housing have been satisfied can be seen through a one-hour tour of Washington, D.C. Many of Washington's finest neighbourhoods have changed from all-white to Negro or mixed occupancy in the past ten years. They remain fine neighbourhoods today—with imposing stone and brick houses set far back on beautifully landscaped and immaculately maintained lawns. But the children playing in the gardens today are Negro, whereas a few years ago they were white. The women waving good-bye to their husbands as they drive off to work are predominantly Negro. They too, were white only a few years in the past.

It strikes the observer with great force that the houses and the general flavour of such neighbourhoods usually have changed little or not at all while the colour of the inhabitants has often changed completely. Similar examples can be found in many other American cities including Philadelphia, Baltimore, Los Angeles, Detroit and Cleveland.

The midwestern study just quoted concluded: 'The chief dynamic of the non-white housing expansion in this decade will be the pressure of the growing Negro middle-class—promptings of status, ambition, taste, racial pride—rather than raw population pressures.' While these factors certainly act as incentives to dispersion, and spotty evidence indicates that they are helping to a limited degree to motivate Negro movement to the suburbs, they are not overwhelmingly potent against the counter-pressures of prejudice and discrimination—particularly where good in-city neighbourhoods are freely available.

Acceptance of Segregation by the Segregated

Legal prohibitions against discrimination in private housing have come, therefore, when the chief pressure which would motivate middle-class Negroes to take advantage of the laws has largely disappeared. In many urban areas of the U.S., the only significant reservoir of unfilled housing need remains among those who are not economically capable of competing in the private market.

In face of this fact, citizen groups striving to implement anti-discrimination laws have often encountered difficulty in finding Negroes willing to support their aims by moving to the all-white suburbs. In the absence of severe need one must possess unusual personal qualities to take up residence, more or less permanently, in a community where virtually all others are not merely of different race but more or less hostile besides.

A 1958 study[3] of Negro 'pioneers' in surburban communities of New York State concluded that most had undertaken the move to the suburbs not because they objected to living in Negro neighbourhoods per se, but because at the time the only neighbourhoods freely open to Negroes within their cities were lower-class slums with their attendant social and physical degradation. Said one:

> I would be very satisfied with an all-Negro neighbourhood if it were a decent neighbourhood. I do not see why I, because I am a Negro, should be forced to live in a neighbourhood where I have nothing in common with the others around me.

Stated another: 'I did not want to live in [the traditional Negro neighbourhoods of Rochester, New York]. My only objection to these areas was the dilapidation and overcrowding.'

Working against such social class striving and desire for better environmental conditions is the raw fear expressed by a respondent to another study in the same State.[4] 'I don't want to be a pioneer. I don't want to lie awake thinking that someone may throw a brick through my window or set fire to my house.' Physical violence such as this man feared is fortunately quite rare today in the northern and western sections of the United States. Yet the occasional examples make national and even international headlines, as did a couple of violent outbreaks in the suburbs of Philadelphia, where Negro dispersion has been more substantial than in many other areas due to the desegregation efforts of Quaker groups. Because of the publicity they receive, such episodes tend to exert a discouraging influence out of all proportions to their numbers.

Much more frequent than violence has been rebuff and humiliation. Negro 'pioneers' have been treated to such insults as anonymous phone calls, sudden erection of dividing fences, delegations of neighbours offering to buy back their newly-acquired homes, and the sight of 'For Sale' signs blossoming on many surrounding houses simultaneous with their entry. Within a relatively brief time, most evidences of neighbourhood hostility usually vanish; but meanwhile they inflict pain. For many, the snubs and taunts to their children are hardest of all to take.

Recently, and partly as a consequence of the increased interest of major religious denominations in the segregation problem, such hostile behaviour has tended to become less frequent. In a growing number of metropolitan areas, residents of the white suburbs have joined together in voluntary groups, often with church sponsorship or involvement, to encourage middle-class Negroes to move into their own neighbourhoods. One such group in the suburbs of Washington, D.C., has aided the suburbanward migration of more than two dozen Negro families within the past year, and it has collected more than 3,000 signatures offering support for its aims.

Still, however, Negroes who possess the economic capacity to move to the suburbs must weigh the advantages of so doing against the disadvantages of moving from neighbourhoods where they feel socially secure. As barriers to Negroes' residence in the suburbs have been lowered, the quality of neighbourhoods available to them within the cities has risen; the two factors have tended to cancel each other out. Naturally, the tendency of Negro neighbourhoods to persist and grow of their own momentum cannot but contribute to the maintenance and growth of ethnocentric attitudes among Negroes themselves.

The relative lack of effective Negro pressure for housing desegregation reveals itself in a number of ways. In a nation-wide study of private housing developments available for interracial occupancy, it was found that two-thirds of those developments had a majority of whites.[5] And practically all achieved this white majority without any kind of quota or control on Negro occupancy. The white preponderance occurred despite the fact that many of the developments offered the only new housing available to Negroes within their metropolitan area.

During its first year of existence, the special Presidential Committee established to carry out President Kennedy's Executive Order against discrimination in Federally-assisted housing received fewer than 100 complaints of discrimination. Many of the agencies charged with enforcing State and local laws against residential discrimination have had similarly small responses from the group immediately affected.

Together with discouragingly slow and cumbersome enforcement procedures, both economic and psychological barriers no doubt play important roles in such phenomena. But the psychological component is large and probably will become more dominant if economic and legal factors continue to diminish in importance.

Acceptance of Segregation by the White Majority

By no means all whites are deeply and irrevocably prejudiced against Negroes. A number of attitude studies have suggested that the great majority are neither strongly pro-segregation nor strongly anti-segregation; and also that the intensity of expressed prejudice has decreased quite markedly in recent years. Recent events have brought to light a strong core of white sentiment in open and fervent support of racial equality, at the same time as they have tended to increase the ferocity of the extreme pro-segregation elements.

But the process of rapid and widespread racial change which has occurred in so many urban neighbourhoods in recent years has created a framework of expectations which may at least be as potent as racial hostility in its influence upon behaviour. In the minds of most white Americans today, a neighbourhood is either white or Negro, or it is racially changing. A stable and permanently integrated neighbourhood is beyond their conception. Thus, the entry of the first Negro family often touches off a wave of move-outs by whites, provided that more Negro families can be found to buy their homes.

Many such whites express deep grief at leaving neighbourhoods they love. They feel that they have been forced out, rather than leaving voluntarily. Many will state that they would not object to one or two Negro neighbours, but that they cannot remain as the sole whites in a Negro neighbourhood. As they leave, they help to confirm their own expectations and to make it more difficult for others to remain—a prime example of Merton's 'Self-Fulfilling Prophecy'.

In this framework of belief that segregation is normal and inevitable, discriminatory practices can be seen not wholly as consciously evil acts but as behaviour arising out of a set of preconceptions which, though they be false, are powerful motives nevertheless.

It is understandable that many white families moving from neighbourhoods which now are solely white will refuse to sell their homes to Negroes less out of deeply-felt prejudice than simply because they fear they will harm their neighbours. Such attitudes, as well as the tendency toward panic once a Negro family does move in, are helped along by the fear that property values will inevitably be lowered by Negro entry—a belief which persists in American urban folklore despite a number of careful studies which have proved otherwise.[6]

There is, nonetheless, a growing wave of white revolt against the wholesale desertion of good neighbourhoods because of Negro co-residence. Recently, the mayor of Trenton, New Jersey, made national news by buying a home in a racially integrated district. Despite the publicity, he was by no means the first leading public official in the United States to choose to purchase or to remain in a section where Negroes also lived. Mayors of several of the nation's largest cities and a growing number of high-ranking officials of the Federal Government in Washington have quietly made similar decisions. So have many private individuals of lesser prominence.

Yet such actions are long overdue, and they are pitifully inadequate to the magnitude of the problem—as is the slow trickle of middle-class Negroes into the suburbs. And neither touches the central obstacle of economic incapacity among the bulk of the Negro market.

The Dilemmas

The dilemmas posed to the United States today by residential segregation are placed in sharper focus by the current national concern for the elimination of poverty. Can poverty among Negroes ever be solved within the framework of great and growing racial separation in the metropolitan centres where the bulk of both Negroes and whites reside? On the other hand, can the metropolitan areas ever be desegregated as long as the majority of Negroes remain poor?

Will the housing advances made by Negroes during the postwar years, with their concomitant benefits in general reduction of substandard housing conditions, continue? Or will they be halted or even reversed through the continuing pressure of low-income Negro housing need upon the available supply—a need which, in the absence of sufficient publicly subsidised housing, is too often met by overcrowding and illegal conversions? As segregation continues to grow, will the central cities find themselves less and less able to cope with their problems, financially and in other respects?

The magnitude of the task presented by the segregation problem today is eloquently summarised in statistics computed by Schermer for the Philadelphia metropolitan area.[7] He estimates that 6,000 Negro households annually would have to move out of present Negro neighbourhoods if these neighbourhoods were merely to be prevented from growing further. If the Negro population were to be dispersed completely among the white population of the Philadelphia metropolis by the year 2000, it would be necessary for 9,700 Negro households to move into districts at present white, and 3,700 white families to move into currently-Negro areas each year from 1961 to 2000.

No such large-scale movements, reversing the predominant trends of the postwar era, are occurring. Nor are they likely to occur without a much wider recognition by the American public, both Negro and white, of the severity and long-range implications of the problem and the nature and size of the efforts required to deal effectively with it. Without them, however, the year 2000 will probably see Negro majorities in the core cities of most of the nation's major metropolitan areas, with a number being almost entirely Negro.

To eradicate residential segregation in the United States will require community planning of a scope not previously accepted by Americans, plus a level of governmental involvement in housing and other 'private' areas of the nation's economy far exceeding that which now exists. To let segregation continue to grow, on the other hand, may well bring difficulties which we do not yet imagine. Yet despite a growing uneasiness it is unlikely that most Americans even dimly glimpse the alternatives before them—even less likely that they possess the knowledge or will to cope with them in realistic fashion.

ARCHITECTURAL CONSIDERATIONS IN THE DESIGN OF HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY

by Frederick Gutheim, Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies, for the Brookings Institution Conference Study on Housing for the Aging

I

The boom in housing for the elderly that got under way in earnest in 1959, when major inducements were offered for the construction of Federally insured private housing and nursing homes and public housing for the elderly, has yet to produce anything of much significance as architectural design. This failure to employ the resources of architecture, rather than any measure of accomplishment has dictated the approach of this paper. Its purpose is to ask questions, not to provide answers. This will not be another in the long series of redundant and admonitory papers that are replete with helpful hints on how to house the elderly.

Let us commence by accepting that the major purpose of housing design is to contribute to prolonging the period of independence of the aged--that is, the time before they are obliged to enter an institution and receive continuous nursing and related medical care. This is the decisive change in housing faced by older people. This paper will also assume the process of aging is a progressive one of withdrawal, and that the principal enemy is voluntary or enforced segregation. In its environmental aspects, this is a social as well as an individual problem.

The fundamental objective of design, even if it is an expressed consumer demand by many elderly individuals and couples, cannot be the creation of isolated communities occupied exclusively by elderly people. The "housing project for the elderly" has been too easily accepted as the normal, ordinary form of housing, an outgrowth of earlier (and perhaps equally undesirable) forms of housing activity. To the greatest extent possible, on the contrary, the housing of elderly people should be similar to the housing they have known all their lives, that is, located generally in a community of socially heterogeneous character, encouraging participation not only in the ordinary day-to-day community routines of shopping and housekeeping but other aspects of community life as well. Difficult as it is in the present age of two-generation families, a conspicuous effort must be made to maintain ties of family relationship and responsibility that once abandoned can never be replaced. This effort must involve housing management as well as design, but by a deliberate effort to maintain community continuity in appearance and in neighborhood living routine, and (to the extent possible) an effort to sustain the actual social fabric by measures that allow members of the same family to live in the same community, we can support powerful forces toward the well-being of the elderly that are now being sacrificed.

The housing for the elderly we have been building, and even worse, the advice about such housing that has been given, has tended to emphasize its segregated characteristics. Not only are the elderly being segregated in fact by special housing arrangements, but by the development of a cult of specially designed dwellings and housing projects. The end result of treating housing for the elderly in separate government programs, and the well-meaning aggressive campaign to concentrate attention on the housing needs of this particular group, has been to set in motion powerful forces that inadvertently have tended to further what is widely regarded as the worst enemy of the elderly--segregation. Housing for the elderly does not need special design but good design. Most of the special design characteristics of housing for the elderly that are sound should apply to ordinary housing, millions of units of which are occupied by handicapped as well as elderly people. The principal thing one can say about housing for the elderly is that it is even more important for them that their housing be well designed than it is for other families and individuals who may be more agile, better able to adjust to inefficient invironments, and more willing to put up with inconveniences. It does not reflect the needs of the aged in particular to say that a bathroom should open directly from a bedroom rather than be accessible around several corners. The aged are not the only ones who suffer from household accidents. As for the special characteristics that are so frequently urged, these can be provided in almost any well-designed home for not more than $10--the sum necessary to purchase stronger light-bulbs, an alarm buzzer to signal from the bathroom, and a clamp-type grip-bar to assist in getting out of the bathtub. If this is the main objective, counselling rather than architectural design would appear to offer the answer.

II

Who are the elderly? Federal housing law says that the elderly are couples, one or more of whom is at least sixty-two years of age. This is certainly an improvement over the retirement age of sixty-five, when most of the elderly should be already settled in the place where they are intending to spend the rest of their lives. From the housing point of view, the elderly are families--perhaps only forty-five years old--whose children have left the home, and who now find themselves living again as a couple. Whatever the medical or social aspects of housing the elderly, the simple fact of accommodation--numbers of people composing families, and the size and functions of the dwelling--ought to receive further recognition. Emphasis on geriatric considerations has really obscured housing aspects which deserve re-examination. Perhaps what has been regarded as a special housing problem, a matter of architectural design, is really not a housing problem at all. Housing the elderly may be something other than we think of it today. Certainly we do not know how to divide up, comprehend and meet housing needs that range from the elderly couple occupying a standard house of 1,200 square feet through increasingly minimal accommodations to barely more than a cubicle or bed space in a nursing home. Single people and couples without children can live in the simplest surroundings. They do not require the elaborate and complex spaces and equipment that the responsibilities of child care and the economics of a large household make necessary. Their problems are, generally speaking, of another sort. They are trying to live on an inadequate retirement income. They have much more spare time, particularly after retirement. They may be less mobile. One of the reasons that has been offered why women live longer than men is that women do not retire suddenly but gradually give up their domestic and household responsibilities as the children one by one leave home. These more gradual transitions should be accompanied by more planning for the future, and to the extent that present laws require that such housing assistance be withheld until one of the couple is aged sixty-two, attention should be given at least to starting the planning process considerably before that age.

Better still, let us examine, in the light of our brief but sufficient experience, the effects of present housing laws, and consider how new and better housing legislation might be enacted that would relate housing decisions to the fundamental evolution of the family rather than to arbitrary age levels.

The principal problems of the aged are due to the future.

One of the things that is quite certain is that one of the couple will die before the other. This is the major change in their housing problem we can foresee.

The end of the family means not only the accentuation of loneliness, but a faster approach to institutional living routines. In terms of housing design, the self-contained family living quarters, however minimal, are replaced by the bed-sitting room; family-prepared meals are succeeded by the institutional kitchen; home care of the sick by nursing care. In housing design terms the line is most clearly drawn in Denmark where there are two distinct types of housing for the aged. In one of these, the so-called staircase plan, self-contained apartments are accessible from each landing, the emphasis is upon independence, autonomy, privacy--family life. In the other, the hall plan, bed-sitting rooms with baths are the principal type--housing for single persons. The interdependence of the physical design of housing and what might be called the social program could hardly be more clearly illustrated.

As a couple ages, it is also pretty certain that sometime before the death of one or both, there will be a period of increasing need for some form of care. Housing and care become interrelated. Should this need require, as it generally does at present, a change in the type of housing? If it does, the move will sacrifice much in the continuity of life, in the loss of security, in the social framework which the elderly find so difficult to replace. The approach to care has been too much considered, as economics and management have dictated it, from the viewpoint of the institution providing the care. We have brought the elderly to the institution. Could we instead bring care to the elderly, housed in accommodations designed to facilitate home care, and employing voluntary or non-institutional resources, quite different housing recommendations would result. In the heterogeneous community, where the demand for part-time jobs is conspicuous, it might be possible to reduce much-needed care for elderly people living alone to a routine hardly more elaborate or costly than baby-sitting. The application of what is already known about baby-sitting, in fact, suggests that a simple experiment with a classified group of elderly requiring rudimentary supervision in their living arrangements would yield useful findings. Until we have acquired more experience with such possibilities, our extensive programs of housing the elderly will be dealing casually with such variables, and many interesting possibilities in housing design will be foreclosed.

We must recognize, furthermore, a basic contradiction between the administrative desirability of the large numbers of elderly people that are supposedly required to achieve efficiency in the provision of welfare services, and non-segregation. Of course to the extent that segregation is avoided, the demand for welfare services may similarly be reduced. But short of a simple response to mechanical demand, some coming to terms would be possible if, let us say, several colonies of homes for the elderly, each located in a larger planned community of its own, were in such reasonable proximity to each other that they might compose a single clientele for a social worker, visiting nurse, or other service worker; and might jointly share some social facilities.*

The provision of care for the elderly is a basic requirement, and to the extent that this can be done while they are still independent and housed in some non-institutional fashion, the heavy social costs and undesirable psychological consequences of institutional segregation can be avoided. At bottom, this appears to be a matter of developing forms of visiting nursing, small clinics, and outpatient facilities. Few hospitals are at present organized adequately or approach their task in the proper frame of mind to accomplish these results. It has been pointed out, indeed, that one perhaps unconscious effect of present hospital policies is to breed in the immediate vicinity of hospitals a substantial colony of rooming houses occupied by apprehensive elderly people whose actual proximity to the hospital facility may be determined simply by how sick they are or think they are. The fear of dying alone has produced such compulsive behavior, with the unwitting aid of the hospitals themselves, that basically undesirable patterns of housing are established.

More important than this factor of care may be the gradual tendency for the elderly to be isolated by the death or disappearance of relatives and friends and other processes of social change. As the inevitable process of withdrawing commences, the anxieties and fears of the advanced aged are faithfully reflected in much of the design of their housing, and perhaps even more in the things that have been written about the design of housing for the elderly.

Remarkably little has yet been said about the extent to which the right kind of housing design would strengthen the independence of the elderly and significantly lengthen the number of years they would be able to live alone. The evaluation of housing design is only now becoming possible, due to the numbers of housing that are being built with government assistance, but it would be a serious deficiency if such evaluation as may be undertaken were limited to the more conventional designs that have been constructed thus far. The opportunity for evaluation and research offered by the increasing scale of the program should be accompanied by more deliberate experimental attempts to test different living hypotheses, and ascertain the environmental influences of various designs. The work of the Pierce Foundation in housing liveability offers methods that might prove of greater value in studying the special problems of housing the elderly than with normal families. There is also the obvious need for greater controls in housing experiments, a need which only systematic research that is today becoming possible, will meet.

More than the dwelling unit needs to be studied if we are to make sound decisions in housing design. In addition to plans, interior design, equipment and other aspects of the dwelling, we need to know about location, community relations and such critical factors as the size of housing communities and sub-communities. There is little possibility of agreement today as between the institutional advocates of housing efficiency and those wrestling with the problems of housing finance, who urge projects up to 750 units with minimums of 200, and the non-segregationists who regard 50 dwellings for the elderly as a high concentration, and for purposes of integrating the elderly in a more heterogeneous community prefer as few as 20. Perhaps useful answers in the field of segregation will involve qualitative aspects of design as well as the battle of abstract numbers. Here again, experimentation is indicated. Many such small communities are needed for study purposes, with carefully planned locations, each with an integrity of its own as a separate community, with its separate lounges, gardens and services for its particular use, but in other respects in the thick of things. Between the Canadian project so anti-segregationist that the elderly were constantly being trampled underfoot by heedless youngsters, and the anxiously protective one in which the aged see only each other, there is room for much experiment.

How shall we study such questions?

Consumer preference is a dubious basis for product design, but in the case of housing it is especially undesirable. When we are considering the elderly, expressions of preference encounter not only the issues of variability but the conflict between unwise desires and scientific facts of physiology and psychology. An issue drawn at random to illustrate this situation is whether living quarters should be heated to the point most elderly people desire.

Certainly we need a bigger kit of research methods for environmental studies, one that includes purely objective physiological measurements, behavioral observations and tests, time-and-motion studies, as well as interviews and analyses. The new science of ergonomics, which in industrial and military studies is contributing significantly to safety, offers much for the study of human factors in environmental situations.

Our consideration of physical segregation of the elderly as a factor in housing design needs to be seen in a dynamic context that will allow us to see how the activities of the elderly may be restricted or enhanced by design. This affects the size of projects no less than the question of heterogeniety, and is probably the decisive factor in maintaining interests, activities and social relationships.

To condemn the elderly to the limited range of activities that are possible in a small apartment is to doom them to the infantile regime of life with a television set. To provide them only with a lounge and game-room is to make of them what Walter Reuther has not inaccurately termed "coffee-drinking bums."

We know far too little about the actual therapeutic value of the range of activities possible to the elderly, much less about what is important to the aims of this paper--how they are affected by location, size, relationships and design of housing. If emphasis should be given outdoor activities like gardening or bird-watching, some profound consequences to housing are involved. But there is an apparently equal case for indoor recreation. And increasingly, the case for greater social activity is urged. We need means by which these differing and often conflicting aims can be given priorities, reconciled in design, and resolved in budgets. Perhaps most of all, they need to be related to specific individuals, their interests, needs and capabilities.

III

At the start of this discussion of housing design, we raised a specifically non-architectural question, that of segregation, to test if design had a social purpose or was merely a question of fitting bricks and boards together, complying with building codes and Federal regulations, and staying within the project budget. Only if it is desired that architectural design contribute to the solution of the broader social problems, are the really talented architects likely to be demanded. Only under such circumstances are they likely to be attracted to this field of practice from the design of schools, hospitals, churches or other buildings in which conspicuous advances in design are being made. And only that way will we get the better housing design we need.

Good design costs money. It saves money, directly. It also contributes to further savings as cumulatively higher standards of design are reached in all buildings of a given type. The process is generally a trial-and-error one, testing drafting-room hypotheses against the economics of building and institutional operations. This does not mean that more systematic research is not possible. Some useful research has been done on architectural problems in this country, especially in the field of school and hospital design, but it has suffered from lack of coordination and spasmodic interest and financial support.

We need to remind ourselves that almost no organized housing research program exists in the United States. Our Federal housing research efforts have been marked by many stops and starts, and bear almost no relation to the huge scale of the national housing program as studies of research expenditures for various industries by the National Science Foundation have amply shown. But even if funds for housing research become available on a larger scale from industry or government, the techniques for research in design are badly in need of development. What passes for "research" in many architectural schools and offices would hardly meet the definitions more commonly used. Perhaps a better pattern for the needed design research is that established by the Nuffield Foundation in Great Britain, especially in its hospital studies. Among other findings, these have concluded that research recommendations need to be tested in actual buildings.

If the design of housing for the elderly offers a challenge to architects, that must be more explicitly stated. Housing for the elderly does present such a challenge, and the concluding section of this paper will attempt to recapitulate in the form of research projects, and to add to what has been said before, some tasks that should enlist and exercise the talents of our most creative architects. In this approach we may well recall the words of Plato to Meno, ". . . in thinking it our duty to seek after the knowledge of things we are at present ignorant of, we should become better men, more manly, and less idle, than if we suppose it is not possible for us to find out, nor our duty to inquire into, what we know now. . . ."

The beginning of better housing design is more knowledge about the specific ways in which environmental design affects people, but in this process of finding out, as Plato says, we have the greatest opportunity to create better architects.

Before exploring some design research topics, let us illustrate in somewhat greater detail a study of how architectural design is engaged in the total problem of housing the elderly. It is here, rather than in what are more commonly considered architectural design factors, that the principal opportunities for progress seem to lie. It is not proposed to develop an elaborate hypothesis, reflecting such considerations as moving from an established home in a stable community, or discussing institutional living. The following sketch should suffice.

The housing element can be put in the total economic picture to the clarification of both the issue of care and its relation to housing design. Food, clothing and other items in the budget of elderly families are relatively constant. Medical care and hospitalization are insurable. Neither category significantly affects housing design. What remains is rent and nursing care. The principal issue is whether the required care is received at home or in an institution. The economic relationship is indicated by the following diagram:

At the beginning of the period $75 is paid for rent in conventional accommodations--a house, apartment, or trailer--and nothing is required for care. At the end of the period complete care in a nursing home is required at a cost of $200 and the private housing accommodation has been given up. The presently separate consideration of housing and care is wasteful in economic terms (when contrasted to other forms of care), hastens dependency, and prejudices housing design. If housing for the elderly can be designed to foresee and provide for the inevitable future need for degrees of care, a living environment more likely to support independence should result. The design issue is whether housing for the elderly should be located, organized in communities, designed and equipped to allow various degrees of home care to be provided. If rent and care can be offered in the same financial "package," the design of housing can reflect these important considerations. A coordinated series of studies of budgets, management and design (embracing both community planning and housing design factors) is needed to test such a program. It might be possible to place such an arrangement upon an actuarial basis and thus do much to resolve at a single stroke the fundamental problems of housing design and those of economic uncertainty. While this has been offered as a general hypothesis that might be reflected in an experimental housing project, and tested by research, it might also be regarded as a general model that might be tested in part from the available experience of some religious or fraternal colonies for the elderly.

What is actually required in this proposal is a series of experimental housing communities, not of especially large size, in which housing of several different types and various forms of home care can be provided and adequate social and cost records kept.

Another form of less specifically architectural research should also be indicated because it is no less fundamental to improved design. Such studies would illuminate the human factor. We need to learn more about perceptions of the elderly and the effect of design. At a minimum, the major deficiences in current housing practice can be noted. We also require a great deal more information about the range of interests, activities, and perceptions of the elderly, especially as these can be put into some kind of an evolutionary time span of the later years.

In the environment of the elderly which public initiative is providing under housing laws, it has been recognized that more extensive provisions for community facilities are required. In the absence of any real information upon which to base decisions, a rough cut has been taken at the issue by providing that 10 per cent of the project funds in public housing for the elderly can be spent for community facilities such as cafeterias, lounges, clinics, and the like. Here we face not only the amount of such facilities but their basic purpose. What impresses the visitor to Scandinavia and Holland, countries where provisions for the aged approach the ideal in design as well as in cultural attitudes and governmental provisions, is the extensive provision of community services. This is not a matter of fancy social and recreation facilities. When dealing with such questions as kitchens and meals, laundry, personal hygiene and appearance, this interrelationship is fundamental. Other forms of medical and nursing care are involved. Too often, under our circumstances, there appears to be no way inwhich a sliding scale allows easy transition from complete independence to complete dependence. It is such objectives that should determine the type and extent of facilities provided.

Surveys of housing arrangements for the elderly in other cultures will raise many useful questions of this sort, as well as suggest valuable ways in which to answer them. The experience of northern European countries is probably most advanced, most readily applicable to the United States, and has been best known to visiting Americans. Yet no systematic account of this experience is available, no evaluation has been attempted, and the basic information itself has not even been translated from Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, and Dutch languages in which few Americans can work. Beyond the fundamental objective account of such experience, it should be regarded as a useful laboratory in which to study human response, economic demand, and other satisfactions with various forms of accommodation. The rational analysis of design alternatives in economic terms, especially pursued in Denmark, is a further area for useful studies.

Perhaps the most valuable single study of housing for the elderly is that conducted and published by the Bouwcentrum, a unique international building research institution in Rotterdam. This document not only summarizes design standards from the principal European nations, but gives a valuable statement of Dutch practice in particular. It embraces both conventional housing for the elderly and nursing homes. Considerable further information of this sort has been compiled in the research files of the Bouwcentrum.

Many suggestions with respect to housing designed for the elderly have emphasized the value of flexibility in design. This has at least three different aspects. The first is to allow a variety of uses of a limited amount of living space. One of the principal proposals offered under this heading is a "living kitchen" containing dining provisions. A second type of flexibility in housing for couples with self-contained living arrangements would provide a bedroom which, upon the death of one spouse, could be transferred to an adjacent apartment, thus allowing continued occupancy of the original apartment (minus the bedroom) by the survivor. A third type of flexibility would reflect the changing life, interests and needs of the elderly - itself a useful field for investigation - and suggest how these can be met by multi-purpose design features.

If the problem of housing the elderly is, as we have earlier asserted, part of the general economic question of people living on pensions and of the psychological problem of idleness and rejection, which together plague that increasing portion of the population who have retired from active life, then we cannot approach housing design in terms simply of the desirability of each room getting direct sunlight at some time of the day or minimum room sizes that are related to the single person, the couple, or the normal family. We must think, too, of aspects of housing design larger than the dwelling unit, if still smaller in community scale than city and neighborhood. Here, again, we must face the issue of segregation fostered by design. The objective of this sector of housing design becomes a matter of subtle involvements with the community in ways that contribute to the cultural goal of the acceptance of the aged as valuable members of the community, rather more than the usual prescription of "insulation, not isolation." A review of the design of housing now being produced with these fundamental considerations in mind will yield some shocking conclusions.

The objections that can be raised against many of the housing communities for the elderly that are being designed and built today run along the following lines. There is the smell of institutionalization, both in size and in character, and this is unfortunately found in even the best "housing projects." They are "projects." This is the difficulty posed by even such excellent designs as Victoria Plaza Apartments in San Antonio, and it is compounded when the architecture is less polished. Even an interesting effort to mix housing for the elderly and for younger families, as proposed in Portland, Oregon, runs afoul of the concentration of the elderly in a single high-rise structure. The "project" character is announced in many subtle ways, from uniform roof lines to the institutional park bench, and it must be condemned in both public and private housing for the elderly. This is not a unique difficulty encountered in designing housing communities for the elderly but is found in other types of mass housing, whether created by public or private interests. The social and psychological consequences of bad project design--of the indifference to proportion, scale, mass, color and other design factors--simply have a more specific consequence in the case of housing for the elderly.

In many private housing developments one finds all the objectionable features of cheap-jack designs: bad siting, masses, proportions; the mixture of colors and materials in a dizzying variety; busyness instead of calmness; gadgets as a substitute for design; and "features" as a substitute for design concepts.

Many housing designs, in the United States and in other countries, show how the disease of "projectitus" can be mitigated or overcome, and it would help keep these in our minds when we approach housing design if they could be assembled in published form. Since in many respects these designs cut across the grain of many public housing doctrines, raising new questions of vernacular architecture and post-Miesian humanism, the collection of such examples could hardly be done from the literature and would represent a challenge to architectural criticism. In this context one should also think of the existing stock of housing, and how it may be converted, supplemented or otherwise used to create housing that meets the needs of the elderly.

Among the characteristics we have suggested as appropriate in housing communities for the elderly are continuity with earlier housing, variety in dwelling accommodation, social and architectural heterogeniety, and smallness of scale. To this might be added a more positive expression in design of functional open spaces such as parks, outdoor recreation areas or even of drying yards; non-residential facilities such as shops; and housing for other than the elderly. Most of all, we need to ask whether the housing provided should take the form of one building or several.

Many of the difficulties presented to the architect by the program for a segregated housing project are inherent. These might be avoided if we remembered the centuries-old Dutch practice of including some dwellings designed for the elderly in nearly every housing community. Of the Finnish architect, Alvar Aalto, who has included houses for the elderly in every superblock, and allocated them to the relatives of other families living in the same superblock. Of Swedish housing where small groups of homes or apartments for the elderly are frequently located close to local commercial centers of half a dozen shops. These are programs that give scope to design. To the extent such opportunities are provided, the design solution is a natural one, not demanding the forced introduction of extraneous elements.

We may emancipate ourselves to some helpful degree from our cultural imperative to segregate the aged by studying what arrangements for housing and care have been developed in other lands. Reference has earlier been made to dwelling and community design experience. We can profit also from the experiences of different cultures such as Japan, or even lands like Italy, where grandparents have an honored place in the home. We can also learn from the experience in the Scandinavian countries (especially Denmark), Holland, and Great Britain, in such outstanding design achievements as Solhjem, a home for the aged in Gentofte, Denmark; Walthamstow, in Essex; or the new Howard House, at Bognor, England. What interests us is not design details but the reflection of a defferent philosophy such as the British "open system." It would also be unfair to omit mention altogether of the many excellently designed housing communities for the elderly in the United States, including those of the Upholsterers' International Union at Salhaven, Florida; or Orange Gardens, Kissimmee, Florida. But, again, it is not architectural design as much as the community approach of a labor union or other corporate body that gives it significance.

IV

But if the challenge of research and the development of better housing design promises to bring better designers to undertake such tasks, we cannot ignore another obstacle to good design which is more immediate and, in the opinion of many architects, of equal importance: the conditions of practice. For unless these are also improved, no amount of research will result in good housing.

Earlier it was observed that a substantial literature of rule-of-thumb recommendations on the design of housing for the elderly has been created. The implicit assumption of such literature is that, with such assistance, an ordinary architect without special experience or insight into the matter would be able to design satisfactory housing for the elderly, and with such aids it would be possible for clients to specify the housing they need, and public officials would be able to approve such designs. The basic objective, in other words, is to substitute handbook knowledge for competence--for the professional skill, experience, and creative ability of a talented architect. This is the wrong direction in which to proceed, and it is not producing housing for the elderly of a very high design standard. As earlier argued, the elderly need a higher standard of design than other people; but they do not need, as is so commonly stated, much in the way of a specialized kind of housing.

Why are projects for the elderly now so poorly designed? Why don't more good architects get these housing jobs?

Let us take a look first at how architects are selected, and then review how they work on the design of housing for the elderly.

Let us acknowledge, and then set aside as of limited significance, the fact that there is actual corruption, especially in public authorities, and apparently especially in New England, in the award of architectural commissions. Architects actually kick-back or pay for jobs. There are places where architectural commissions are awarded by competitive bidding on fees. These practices are illegal, unethical, and condemned by everyone concerned, but they persist and are a direct cause of much bad housing design.

More importantly, there is also abroad a strong popular feeling that can be called anti-design or anti-quality. This has many aspects to it. There is the belief, for example, that good design is not for poor people, or that if it does not actually cost more, it looks as if it does and will lead people to suppose someone is extravagant. The only way to beat back such negative attitudes and poor-mouthing is through education and strong leadership.

In some public housing projects there are conflicts between the local housing authority staff and the members of the authority, in which the architect finds himself in the middle. Frequently, there are swirling currents of planning and politics that pay little heed to the end result in terms of design.

It is not that we do not know how to design housing for the elderly, in other words, but that too many preconceptions, indifference, and a willingness to sacrifice design as less important than other parts of the picture, have prevailed.

Many of the design factors that we have mentioned earlier are faced early in the development of a housing project, before the appearance of the architect. Often when his contract is signed and he faces the job, the architect discovers that the design is frozen not only by the selection of a site and the application of standards that have been provided but by the preconceived ideas that others have had when these earlier decisions were made. There is the further problem that the architect is given a timetable in which any change means delay. The development of design is positively discouraged. The architectural program, which includes the number of units, the height, the arrangement of elevators, and matters of that kind, has laid the foundations for standardized design.

Frequently, a staff architect is engaged by authorities with larger housing programs, and it is assumed that his participation in the early stages of project development gives adequate recognition to the interests of the architect ultimately appointed. This is not the case. Nor is it true that the uncertainty of the project's going ahead is a reason for not appointing an architect, whose engagement can be contingent and whose limited consulting services in the early development stages can be specified and compensated accordingly.

To sum it up, the architect of the project should be the best man possible, and he would make a substantial contribution to the preliminary program stage. He should be paid specifically for his services during this period.

Occasionally, there will be a group of projects that represent a whole phase of a comprehensive housing program in which certain common elements may be resolved successfully by a consulting architect. But the general rule should be that at the earliest possible stage, as soon as a project has been identified and is known to be the subject of separate design, the architect should be engaged. The specific project is the only key to inspired design.

The selection of architects is frequently confused by extraneous issues, among which probably the most absurd is the requirement that he have done similar work. This involves the same illusion of specialization we cited at the beginning of this section. That a man has designed one bad housing project for the elderly does not qualify him to design another project of the same kind. Nor, on the whole, should much attention be given to extensive experience or the architect's current office staff to execute large-scale projects of the size contemplated, or to his residence in the immediate community where building is to be done. The ability to turn out a set of drawings with exceptional speed is also an exaggerated qualification which usually shows that something is wrong with the project schedule. The only thing that really matters is his professional competence as illustrated by previous work, including designs not executed, and his professional standing as reflected in credentials and recommendations.

When cupidity or stupidity are not involved, what usually blocks the selection of good architects is a strong reluctance of clients and local public bodies to make a positive selection on a qualitative basis. It is this which leads to the introduction of many additional and, on the whole, meaningless qualifications whose purpose is to reduce the number of architects under consideration, or worse, to allow the selection of the wrong man for some plausible reason.

When it is impossible to make a reasonable selection by some direct method, recourse may be had to a competition, or an architectural selection committee or board. These are also excellent devices to employ to break through routine and inertia and to bring younger men and fresh ideas to the surface.

Once the architect is on the job, he finds that the obstacles to innovation in design are many. We need to be more deliberate in creating incentives to overcome them. It should be possible, for example, after he is engaged, for an architect to offer trial sketches for preliminary approval to local public bodies. Where the FHA tends to penalize the architect for trying something new, and his client is invariably apprehensive that innovation will endanger a favorable review or lead to costly delays, these institutional factors against innovation and among builders and sponsors of projects need to be combatted. The architect finds himself dealing not merely with the local housing authority, in the case of a public project, but with the Public Housing Authority's regional and central office. He has to deal with the planning commission and with zoning authorities, with highway plans and with building and sanitary codes. Together these create a "generalizing" network. Each may seem reasonable to itself. But the decision of each is a stitch in the strait-jacket of housing design.

Together these agencies with their criteria and standards, their obligations expressed in space, cost, materials, management, their particular institutional needs, are cumulatively destructive of housing design. None are concerned with the ultimate housing objective.

Nor do any respond to the specific conditions of site, purpose, and time in which the architect finds positive inspiration and meaning for design. In the exhausting struggle between making the most of the unique opportunity of a particular project, and the gauntlet his design must run, the most enthusiastic architect must find himself wearied.

What could be done to improve matters? Perhaps in the concept of a board of participating agencies, there would be some hope of a device to educate selected men in the regulating agencies, and identify their responsibility for the housing project. The work of such a board might strengthen, embolden architects and encourage them to innovate. Such a board could advise architects and would possibly represent a group to whom architects could appeal from the arbitrary decisions of individual agencies. We need such experiments.

Possibly the one agency that is likely to have more breadth than any others, the planning commission, might assume some of the role attributed to the board of participating agencies. In Washington, the planning commission has interceded with the municipal authorities when their designers of urban renewal projects have run into difficulties. The local sponsoring agency, of course, should be presumed to have an interest in a high quality of design, and might be expected to go to bat for innovation and to fight arbitrary limitations. But they seldom behave that way, and it might take the appointment of some new official with this particular responsibility to get them into action. Those now on the job want to save money or keep the job on schedule; they have no special interest in the high standard of the end product.

The problems of architectural innovation might also be relieved through experimental projects that could be exempted from "the rules" and allow changes, pioneering, and longer production schedules. If such counter-balancing is to be effective, these projects must be really experimental, not just ways of getting around the status quo. They should be regarded as research projects. The more standardization in housing design, the more experiments are desirable, and it should be possible to set an actual percentage of the number of units in each local program that would be dealt with on their own merits, exempted from the conventional way of doing business.

The improvement of housing standards is another way to make design progress. Performance standards, FHA minimum property regulations, building code reforms, and other activities might be mentioned in this connection.*

Research in professional practice also offers a means by which better architectural service may be procured, and the architect given greater opportunity and incentive toward progressive design. Case studies of professional service, especially where related to design achievement, would be a useful addition to what is already known. Management studies in architectural offices might offer guidelines that would help architects allocate their time between the various phases of their work so that greater attention would be given design research. Incentives to innovate, such as those found in parts of the business community where research is considered a business expense, can also be explored. The relations of architects to engineers and other professional consultants are frequently a source of friction and waste. These and other questions of professional practice might usefully be explored by the American Institute of Architects.

Nothing would be so salutory, however, as making it clear that a real job has to be done, that those who can contribute to it are badly in demand, and that if they show that they can do it, they will be more than welcome.

Housing for the elderly is not a special kind of housing, but it must be good housing. If it is good for the elderly, it will be good for most small families; and this will have an impact upon housing demand in general, it will affect consumer taste, and it should be translated by the designers into all forms of housing. Research in the design of housing for the elderly cannot be too specialized; it should have as one of its most important arguments the desirability of maintaining the general advance of housing design in its application to all forms of housing.

Under present circumstances the type of design progress that has been made by individual architects is probably concentrated in upper-income housing for the elderly, where better architects have been engaged and given the opportunity to explore the problem in a more thorough fashion. A better documentation and evaluation of their efforts would be an effective step in speeding the communication of such findings.

In conclusion, let us consider how we can sharpen the focus of attention in housing design upon the major fundamental question of social policy that might be advanced by design--segregation. Let us consider the design of housing and care as interdependent issues, and resolve them both physically and economically in some progressively changing relationship. And let us concentrate upon the importance of getting good design generally, not upon exotic and frequently unimportant design characteristics in housing for the elderly.

ART & BOOK FESTIVAL JUNE 16, 17, 18

THOUSANDS EXPECTED AT N.I. FAIR

Thousands of Washington area residents and visitors are expected to attend the Fifth Annual Neighbors Art and Book Festival at Coolidge High School, 5th and Sheridan Sts., N.W., from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. on Saturday, June 17 and Sunday, June 18.

All members of Neighbors, Inc. and their guests are invited to join the exhibiting artists and other dignitaries at the Pre-Opening Reception and sale from 7:30 - 9:30 p.m. Friday, June 16. Attending will be the Festival's three sponsors, Supreme Court Justice Douglas, Herblock, and I.F. Stone. Those attending the reception will have an opportunity to see the Festival and make purchases before the doors open to the general public Saturday morning.

Hundreds of paintings, prints, posters and other original art works will be exhibited at the Festival in what promises to be the highest quality showing by area artists since the Festival's inception. Thousands of books and records, two dance programs, folk singing, a potter's wheel demonstration, a children's program and refreshments will combine to make this year's Festival one the entire family will want to attend.

N.I. ELECTION RESULTS

At neighborhood meetings this spring the following Neighborhood Representatives and Alternates were elected:

Brightwood:	Mercedes Botts	882-7399
	Reggie Holton	RA6-9308
Manor Park:	John Thurber	882-3267
	Virginia Kent	TA9-0137
Shepherd:	Ray Thelwell	829-4045
	Pres Jenkins	726-5926
Takoma	Virginia Mondale	829-6854
	Beverly Sharp	882-4590

They are your representatives and they look forward to hearing from you about any ideas or problems you may have.

At the May 24th Annual Membership meeting, the following were elected to the Board to serve as at-large Directors: Wes Copeland, Ruth Stack, John Thompson and E. Franklin Warner.

SUMMER ACTIVITIES SCHEDULED AT TAKOMA RECREATION CENTER (PHONE RA3-8222)

TENNIS: Free, expert instruction will be given to 7-17 year olds from 10-11 a.m. Fridays starting June 29th and running for seven sessions. Registration is June 12-16 at the Recreation Center.

SWIMMING: Free swimming lessons for 9-12 year olds will be 9-12 a.m. Monday through Friday. Registration June 12-16 at the Center.

SUNDIAL PROGRAM: A summer program for 3-6 year olds in four two-week sessions beginning June 26th will accept registrations June 14 & 15 at the Center. Information can be obtained by calling Mr. Butler.

BASEBALL LEAGUE: The 12 and under team has already played three games and the 13-15 year old team will start its season with a home game at 4:30 on June 12th. They will be wearing their N.I. uniforms for the first time. Boys interested in playing should contact Mr. Butler at the Center.

SPECIAL EVENTS: Each Wednesday at 3 p.m. throughout the summer a Special Event will be scheduled at the Center, such as a Pie-Eating Contest, Hobo Day, Talent Show, Everbody's Birthday Party, Puppet Show, Scavenger Hunt, Art Contest, and others.

REFRESHMENT COMMITTEE HELP !!

Each year as opening time for the Art and Book Festival nears, I look forward to again working with old and new neighbors. Everyone can help make the Bake Sale a success by baking pies, cakes, cookies, sheet cakes, breads, etc. for Saturday and Sunday, June 17th and 18th. We also need cookies baked for our reception Friday evening.

Ribbons will be given in honor of the 1) most beautiful, 2) most original and 3) most home styled baked goods. Please specify which day you will deliver your item.

This is the perfect thing for all of the "last minute" people who want to make a contribution to the Festival. The longer you wait, the fresher your baked goods will be. Just don't forget, please.

Hot dogs and rolls are urgently needed or check donations to make the purchases. We need workers for Saturday and Sunday. Please call Mrs. Dutchess Margerum, chairman of refreshment committee. (829-4036)

N.C.P.C. TRANSPORTATION HEARING SCHEDULED

The National Capital Planning Commission has scheduled a public hearing for Wednesday, June 14, 1967, at 7 PM, in the State Department West Auditorium, 23rd St., N.W., between C and D Sts., on the transportation aspects of the proposed comprehensive plan for the National Capital. Under discussion will be the proposed rapid transit system, the proposed North Central Freeway, and other major freeway and bridge proposals.

A large attendance of N.I. members is encouraged to demonstrate our interest and concern about those aspects of the proposed comprehensive plan which which adversely affect the Nation's Capital generally, and the N.I. area in particular.

Any person interested in testifying at this hearing who has not by June 12 requested opportunity to testify may, if time permits, be heard. Public testimony of this kind is also encouraged by N.I. members.

As presently proposed, the North Central Freeway will follow, generally, the B & O railroad track alignment through the N.I. area. Many N.I. families will be affected directly by this proposal, or indirectly because of the realignment of Blair Road in the immediate vicinity of the freeway. The lawsuit pending against the construction of the freeway has not yet been scheduled for argument in the Federal District Court. It is unknown at this time when that argument will be scheduled or when a decision may be expected in the case.

AN N.I. WELCOME TO NEW NEIGHBORS

Mr. and Mrs. Frank DeStefano will move into 421 Whittier St. in mid-July from Silver Spring. They bring twin five year olds and 9 and 10 year olds.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom McCallion have moved to 6708 4th Street.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Monroney will move into 516 Cedar Street in August with their four children.

Mr. and Mrs. Larry Kowitch have bought a house at 1323 Hemlock Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicolas Smart have moved to 7532 Morningside Drive from Springfield, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Levine have bought a house on Locust Road.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Margulies have moved into the home they built on North Portal Drive.

Elected to the Nominating Committee were Thelma Lee, Chairman; Bob Skinner, Carolyn Jackson and Naomi Caplan. At its meeting on June 7 the Board chose the following elected Directors to serve on the Nominating Committee: Virginia Mondale, Mercedes Botts, and E. Franklin Warner.

As required by the by-laws, the Executive Committee elected the Personnel Committee at its meeting June 7. The three Director members elected were Paul Berger, Chairman, Joe Hairston, and Ray Thelwell. The non-director members elected are Irving Shulman and Hilda James.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE TESTIFIES ON SCHOOL BOUNDARY CHANGES

At the June 5 hearing held by the Board of Education, Mrs. Barbara Simmons, recently appointed chairman of our education committee, testified on NI's behalf.

Mrs. Simmons opposed the proposed extension of the Deal and Wilson boundaries east of Rock Creek Park along 16th Street, from Eastern Avenue to the tip of the former optional zone. Mrs. Simmons told the Board this miniscule manipulation would not achieve meaningful integration, a policy which Neighbors supports and works to achieve. Mrs. Simmons charged that the proposal would cause socio-economic discrimination. She also attacked the piece-meal approach to integration and called on the Board of Education to do the following:

1. Make a declaration of committment to meaningful integration.
2. Explore all alternatives for achieving such integration.
3. Actually implement plans on a comprehensive basis which would achieve meaningful integration.

SECRETARY AND REAL ESTATE CHAIRMAN APPOINTED

At the Board meeting June 7 the Board approved two appointments proposed by Ed Cogen, N.I. President. Mr. Gregory Swanson was appointed to the office of Secretary, filling the vacancy caused several months ago by the resignation of Marthe Rosenthal.

The Board also approved Mrs. Martha Graham as chairman of the real estate committee. Former chairman Warren Kornberg's resignation was accepted with regret by the Board at the meeting.

Martha has worked on the Housing Information Service for the Takoma area for several months and with Ruth Cogen, Sue Swisher and Karen Wardlaw has shared in the very demanding and vitally important work of the Housing Service. They are looking forward to a reorganization of the Housing Service for more effective action to meet the growing number of people interested in living in the NI area. Anyone with ideas or time to share in showing houses and introducing newcomers to the neighborhood are urged to contact Martha Graham (726-5524).

CONGRATULATIONS

Dr. Marvin Gline has been appointed to an Associate Professorship at Boston University

Mr. Thomas White has been appointed to an Associate Professorship at the University of Virginia Law School.

Mr. Robb Taylor has been named Director of Institutional Research at Temple University, Philadelphia.

AREA SCHOOL NEWS

Paul: Three Paul students took first place honors in the city-wide Science Fair: Warren Hercules, Michael Lake and James Portray. Cathy DeBoe and Deborah Manning took second places and Carolyn David, Blake Cavanaugh and Jock Barek took third places. Winning Honorable Mentions and Commendations were Craig Thompson, Stephen Calhoun, Harry T. Jones,Jr., Jane Arner, Kevin Thomas, Dale Scott and Kathy DeBoe. In all, 17 Paul students won city-wide recognition in this highly competitive Science Fair.

Rabaut: The ninth graders have given several performances of an original play written by Thomas Collier, a mathematics teacher on the faculty.

Coolidge: Twenty-eight graduating seniors have won scholarships to colleges and universities all over the nation.

TWO COORDINATORS NAMED FOR SCHOOL PLAN

The long range proposal of parent-teachers groups in the NI area to enlist the help of the University of Maryland in developing a comprehensive plan to improve education in our schools has taken a big step forward. Two coordinators have been chosen jointly by the University and by the School Administration. They are the first persons with full-time assignments. Latinee Gullattee has been named coordinator for the secondary schools in the NI area and Mrs. Alice Butler has been appointed elementary school coordinator. Mr. Gullattee is a former English instructor at McKinley High School and lives in the NI area. Mrs. Butler presently teaches sixth grade at Brightwood Elementary School and taught previously at Whittier School.

Both Mrs. Butler and Mr. Gullattee will act as liason between the schools in the area and the University, first in the placement of student teachers and then in other fields.

A small committee is at work drafting an application for funds under Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that would permit the establishment of an Institute for Educational Development which would become a center for a continuing forum on educational problems in the schools and a means for considering and implementing solutions. The proposal grew out of discussions in NI's Education Committee.

Another consequence of the work of the Education Committee is the program on problems of school desegregation now being conducted every Monday afternoon at Roosevelt High. Funds for the program were obtained from a grant. Nancy Good, wife of former NI President, Robert Good, is due much of the credit for the program. It was an application she developed before leaving for Zambia which gave the School Administration the impetus for obtaining funds for the seminars.

THANKS TO OUR NEWSLETTER HELPERS

FATE OF SUMMER ENRICHMENT PROGRAM IN N.I. AREA UNCERTAIN

In the Fall of 1966 the city of Washington was divided into 20 area, each with a Planning Council to plan summer recreation programs for area youths. Mrs. Barbara Simmons and Mr. Leroy Price, Chairman and Co-chairman for Area I, of which N.I. is a part, worked very hard, along with 45 members of the steering committee, to produce a good program for our area. As of now, Area I is one of 8 areas which will receive no funds to implement this program.

D.C. asked Congress for three million dollars to run the programs in all 20 areas. The House recommended and passed a portion of the requested sum but the Senate sub-committee, which is chaired by Senator Robert Byrd of West Virginia, granted no funds for the D.C. Summer Enrichment Program. Instead, his committee approved President Johnson's request for $75 million to run summer programs, (among other things), for the whole country. Of this money, D.C. will probably receive close to the requested three million. However, all of this money will be routed through O.E.O. and U.P.O. These agencies have poverty criteria and in D.C. there are 12 poverty and 8 non-poverty areas. Area I is classed a non-poverty area as it does not contain significant concentrations of poverty--e.g. family of four earning less than $3,000 yearly.

Through the actions of Senator Byrd's committee, thousands of children will be denied a good summer program. At best we feel let down and at most, cheated and deceived.

TAKOMA SWIM TEAM ORGANIZES

All persons with children 18 years old and younger who are interested in joining the Takoma Swim Club may call Bill Peer (223-1440 or 726-1047) for further information.

The club swims competitively against other teams in the area. It uses the Takoma Pool, 4th and Van Buren Sts., N.W., as its home pool. Competition is by age bracket.

No experience is necessary and instructional lessons will be provided.

TAKOMA POOL OPENING DELAYED

Although the city-wide date for pool opening is June 16 the Takoma pool will be delayed. A new filtering system is being installed and the twenty-year old pipes are being replaced, though it was originally hoped they could be repaired. Recreation Department officials cannot say when the pool will be ready.

FESTIVAL FESTIVAL FESTIVAL FESTIVAL
FESTIVAL FESTIVAL FESTIVAL
FESTIVAL FESTIVAL

The Fifth Annual Neighbors Art and Book Festival will be the biggest and the best to date. Highlights will include:

PROFESSIONAL ART SHOW

A professional art show featuring the works of the area's most talented artists. The show will be somewhat smaller this year, but chairman Hope Applebaum promises the highest quality art show in the Festival's history.

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
JUNE 17 & 18
DON'T MISS IT !

WORKS BY HERBLOCK

The Festival is fortunate this year in being able to offer a limited number of cartoons of the Washington Post's Herblock, who is also serving as a sponsor. He will be available to personally autograph prints at the Friday evening reception.

CRAFTS

A wide variety of crafts will be available from some 20 professionals who will set up booths and tables at this year's Festival. Included will be pottery, ceramics, jewelry, African crafts, Scandinavian rugmaking, weaving, fabric prints, and sculpture, reports chairman Lynn Harvey.

NON-PROFESSIONAL ART SHOW

The non-professional art show will offer a wide array of fine works attractively exhibited. Chairman Mary Jacobs anticipates a showing of several hundred quality works. In addition, the Festival will offer many posters, prints, woodcuts and other original works.

BOOKS

An estimated 11,000 books will be available for purchase, including a few rare finds. There will be some sets of encyclopedia and several new editions of LaRousse's Encyclopedia of Mythology.

RECORDS

Chairman Sue Swisher has come up with some unusual records, including 175 albums of 78 rpm classics and 250 LP pops records dating back to the 1930's and 40's. These include some Pearl Bailey, Ink Spots and Frank Sinatra oldies.

CHILDREN'S ART SHOW

Prize-winning art work by students at a dozen Nrothwest schools will be exhibited. The children's work will be the only art at the Festival not available for purchase.

MOVIES & FOLK SONGS

The young fry will be able to sing along with folk singer Jackie Marlin from 1 PM to 3 PM on Sunday. The movies, scheduled from 10:30 AM to 2:30 PM Saturday, include Mickey Rooney in "Huckleberry Finn," and Walt Disney's "The Hound That Thought he was a Racoon." Also showing will be "Madeline" and "Rumplestiltskin."

DANCE PROGRAMS

Program chairman Naomi Caplan has come up with two outstanding dance features. The African Cultural Drummers and Dancers will perform at 3 PM Saturday, and the Erika Thimey Modern Dance Troupe will be on stage at 3 PM Sunday.

NI MOVES ON SCHOOL DESIGN, BOUNDARY PROBLEMS

Committees of sub-committees of the Education Committee; committees of the whole and other interested NI members have moved many local concerns over school problems into general community view recently.

The effect of all this energy and work has been to get concrete results in areas affecting citizens throughout the entire community.

Worried over the design of new schools scheduled for construction in the neighborhood, Neighbors brought this concern to the total Washington community at a meeting held at Friendship House on February 1st.

An Ad Hoc Coalition of concerned parents and citizens was formed at this meeting. The Coalition send a petition to the School Board asking for a special meeting prior to the 14th of February and the beginning of construction at the Tubman Elementary School.

Many meetings and maneuverings later, the meeting with the school board still was not a reality, but at press time it was announced that the Superintendent of Schools had held up construction of the Tubman School at least until after the regularly scheduled meeting of the board of education on February 21st.

NI and the Ad Hoc Coalition count this as a partial, but significant victory in the push for citizen participation in decision making events effecting the future of our children in the public schools.

Other, furious work by the NI Education Committee in recent weeks has centered around the school boundary controversy, with special meetings with citizens West of the Park, special study groups, and subcommittees of the Education Committee meeting almost daily.

The results of all this effort by many dedicated NI members will be presented to all members of NI at a special General Membership Meeting, Monday, February 19th.

TITLE III PROGRAM APPROVED BY BOARD OF ED.

At the December 20 meeting of the Board of Education the Board approved the submission of the "University of Maryland Plan" to the U.S. Office of Education for funding under Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The application seeks $100,000 to create an Institute for Educational Development covering seven schools in the NI area. The Institute would expand the staff development program already in operation, would explore the possibility of an interim decentralized organization of the program and would conduct a number of programs to improve the education in the schools and to increase the participation of the community in the schools. It will probably be several months before the Office of Education announces its decision on the application.

MANNING WRITES NI PRESIDENT COGEN

In response to a letter from NI President Ed Cogen, in which he thanked Supt. Manning for presenting the Title III program to the Bd. of Ed. and assured him that NI was going to continue its efforts to improve the schools, Manning wrote Cogen urging NI to "do all in your power to help the schools in your community. The new Superintendent said such effort by citizens is much appreciated.

WIN REVIEW OF TAKOMA SCHOOL PLANS

Neighbors, Inc. and the Takoma PTA have succeeded in having school officials continue the delay of the construction of the "new" Takoma school and won the right to review the building plans and have them studied by private architects. The two groups have now gotten the plans and have started their study.

This latest development in our protest over the proposed "egg crate" school came about after a meeting on January 17 between Deputy Superintendent Benjamin J. Henley and Mrs. Barbara Simmons, chairman of NI's Education Committee, and Mrs. Marlene Maier, President of Takoma PTA, and others.

HOME DIALOG

METROPOLITAN COMMITTEE FOR CITIZEN DIALOGUE

Recognizing that an increasingly grave crisis exists among racial and ethnic groups in the United States, we of the metropolitan Washington area propose a program which will create opportunities for meaningful dialogue across racial, ethnic, and economic lines--aimed at reducing tensions caused by lack of communication.

----Statement of Purpose, Ad Hoc Committee for Citizen Dialogue, January 8, 1968.

STEP NUMBER ONE: A PROGRAM OF HOME DIALOG

Q. What is the HOME DIALOG program now being initiated in the Washington area?

A. HOME DIALOG is the first in a series of programs aimed at increasing the quality of interracial communication.

HOME DIALOG can be arranged for individuals or groups, and may take place in your own locality, or in another locality within the metropolitan area.

Q. Who sponsors HOME DIALOG?

A. A group of concerned citizens--all volunteer--who are persuaded that concerted effort is vitally needed NOW to develop person-to-person communication in greater depth especially among Negroes and whites.

Although not directly affiliated with any religious, civic or social organization, HOME DIALOG has the cooperation of religious and community groups.

Q. Who may participate in HOME DIALOG?

A. Anyone interested in the problem of race relations or in becoming racially mature is invited and encouraged to participate.

Commitment to participate means the courtesy of keeping your reservation for the HOME DIALOG for which you are scheduled. No reciprocity is expected on your part as this is an educational venture and not a social visit.

Long experience has shown that more people are willing to host than to visit another home. Therefore, in order to facilitate arrangements, recruitment will emphasize only two categories of participants: 1) persons willing to visit and 2) persons willing to host or visit.

Opportunity to join a CONTINUING DIALOG group will be offered as the demand requires.

HOME DIALOG may be arranged for youth groups of junior high school age on up. Youth groups need adult sponsorship. There is no upper age limit.

Q. Is HOME DIALOG a totally new program?
A. Programs similar to HOME DIALOG are now in operation in a number of cities across the country. HOME DIALOG is an outgrowth of the Educational Home Visit Program sponsored in the area by the Interreligious Committee on Race Relations from 1962 to 1965.

Q. Why should I as a Negro participate in HOME DIALOG?
A. Your participation is vital because you are needed as an educator on what it means to be a minority member of the community. By sharing your feelings, experiences and ideas, you offer a deeper insight that leads others toward fuller commitment to work for improved opportunities in education, employment and housing for all. Negro participants are critically needed for HOME DIALOG.

Q. Why should I as a white person participate in HOME DIALOG?
A. The present racial tension which has in some areas reached crisis proportion, indicates that all of us need to grow in our understanding of one another. Whites, in particular, need to have first hand information from Negroes in order to give in-depth answers to questions about demonstrations and riots, about non-violence and civil disobedience and other pressing issues of our day.

Q. How would you describe HOME DIALOG?
A. HOME DIALOG begins with participants coming to a previously designated church or public building for a brief orientation at 2:00 P.M. on the First Sunday of the month. Six to ten people are assigned to go to the home of a host family and are given an escort. The escort accompanies each group to make introductions and to insure that HOME DIALOG is a meaningful experience for all. The discussion of from one to two hours usually ends with coffee.

SCHOOL ISSUES ACTIVE

TAKOMA REPLACEMENT - With the Board of Education set to act on the final plans for the Takoma Elementary School replacement on April 17, the Takoma PTA and the Neighbors, Inc. Education Committee have been continuing their campaign to have the proposed building design scrapped, and to have new plans drawn for the building. The City Council, at its March meeting, adopted a resolution asking the Board of Education to delay the Takoma plans and invited the Board to meet to consider changes, especially in regard to the District Government's role in school design, site selection and construction. The Council took the action after hearing testimony from Daniel Safran, Legislative Chairman of the Takoma PTA; Edward S. Hollander, Executive Director of Neighbors; Mrs. Barbara Simmons, who spoke on behalf of the Ad Hoc Coalition on School Design and Site Selection, and others. The Board of Education, meeting the following day, turned down the Council's request for a delay in the Takoma plans. An impressive showing was made at the Council meeting by the 150 Takoma parents who attended the meeting in support of a modern, flexible design for the new school.

NI ELECTIONS TO BE HELD MAY 22 AT ANNUAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING

The annual May general membership meeting of Neighbors, Inc. will be held on Wednesday, May 22. The place and additional details will be in the next newsletter. The positions to be filled are the 4 officers, 6 Director/Chairmen members to the Board of Directors, and 4 members to the Nominating Committee. The current Nominating Committee will prepare a slate of candidates for the officer and Director/Chairmen positions, but nominations will also be accepted from the floor if the nominee has agreed to run.

Anyone who would like to suggest names to the Nominating Committee of possible officers or Director/Chairmen, should call Mrs. Thelma Lee, chairman of the Nominating Committee, 882-1867. At the meeting, the positions on the Nominating Committee will be filled solely from nominations from the floor.

CORRECTION, BRIGHTWOOD PLAYGROUND

Mrs. Sylvia Samenow, Principal of Brightwood Elementary School, has written to advise us that the Brightwood playground is open all during the year. A story in the March INK erroneously gave the impression that it is open only during the summer.

WE MOURN DR. KING'S DEATH

NI CALLS FOR LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM TO CORRECT URBAN ILLS, ENDORSES POOR PEOPLES CAMPAIGN; TELEGRAM TO MRS. KING

Neighbors, Inc. and all of its members mourn the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King. NI President Edward S. Cogen wired Mrs. King that we grieve her husband's death and that "we now rededicate ourselves in the years ahead to make his dream come true." The NI office was closed on the day of Dr. King's funeral.

In response to the civil disorders that took place in Washington following the assassination, many Neighbors members were active during that weekend collecting food and other supplies needed by persons in the disrupted areas. The NI Board at its meeting on April 10th, endorsed the Poor People's Campaign, which Dr. King was to have led, and appointed Mrs. Ruth Pearl to serve as liaison for NI with the Campaign. Everyone interested in working with Mrs. Pearl on NI's support for the campaign, should call her at 723-1507.

MASSIVE LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Even as the smoke from the many fires hung over the city, NI issued a statement to its membership, urging Congress to respond constructively and meaningfully to the crisis in the nation's cities. The flyer asked NI members to srite and phone their friends asking them to write their Congressmen and Senators in support of a massive and adequately funded legislative program. The NI statement said, "You can be sure the conservative backlash will make itself heard, but the voices of reason and justice must be much louder!"

As minimun steps, NI called for the prompt passage of a civil rights bill with a strong fair housing section, and massive appropriations for the poverty program, increased manpower programs, increased aid to education and an expanded welfare program, as well as additional social welfare legislation with sufficient funds to meet the needs.

The response from the membership to the NI statement has been good; many members have written and phoned out-of-town friends; all members are urged to. The major meaningful response, not just to Dr. King's death, but to the problems of poverty and race, must come from Congress.

NI OPPOSSES LIQUOR LICENSE FOR 128 KENNEDY STREET LOCATION

The Board of Neighbors, Inc. voted to oppose an application for a class "C" retail liquor license made by Northwest Gardens Investment Corp. The license was requested for 128-130 Kennedy St N.W. for a proposed ballroom. In testimony at the public hearing held on the application by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, Mrs. Carol Rende, Chairman of NI's Neighborhood Services Committee, cited the opposition of residents in the nearby area and their fears that a parking problem would be created. The stated plan of Northwest Gardens Investment Corp. was to operate a ballroom and allow the group renting it to bring their own liquor, but, because the ABC regulations do not provide for this kind of facility, the Corporation was obligated to apply for a class "C" licence which permits the sale of liquor for on-premises consumption. In her statement,

FOLDING CHAIRS & TABLES NEEDED BY FOOD COMMITTEE

The food and refreshments committee of the Art and Book Festival will need folding tables and benches and chairs. An expanded food program is being planned for this year, including lunches and suppers and a greater variety of refreshments available for sale. To hold all these goodies, the committee is seeking aluminum tables, card tables and folding benches and chairs and would like to arrange for them now. If you're interested in helping, or can lend a table, call Mrs. Denham, 723-5652.

Mrs. Rende pointed out to the Board that once a class "C" license is granted, the Corporation could operate any kind of establishment and would not be restricted to their stated intention of having a ballroom which would be rented out to clubs and organizations for their private use.

URGES REVISION OF ABC BOARD PROCEDURES

Neighbors, Inc. solicited and received a written statement from the Corporation regarding the planned method of operation. Mrs. Rende submitted a copy of the statement to the ABC Board so that, in the event the license is granted, there will be a written record of the Corporation's stated intentions which can be reviewed when the license comes up for renewal. Mrs. Rende urged the ABC Board to revise its current procedures, under which transcripts of the public hearings are typed only if the case goes to court. She pointed out that the transcripts of public hearing held by both the Zoning Commission and the Board of Zoning Adjustment are typed in all cases and are available to the public.

NI AREA 2B PTA COUNCIL PASSOW STUDY GROUP SUBMITS RECOMMENDATIONS

A Study Group on the Passow Report on D.C. schools sponsored jointly by Neighbors, Inc. and the Area 2B PTA Council has submitted 25 recommendations to the Board of Education, and to the Executive Study Group and the Community Council on the Passow Report. The NI-2B Council gave one of its recommendations top-priority status, a proposal for an in-service teacher training program.

Mrs. Charlotte Kowitch, chairman of the Study Group, testified before the April Board of Education meeting, giving particular emphasis to the in-service training program. She said to the Board that the Study Group pulled together the recommendations scattered throughout the Passow Report and developed them into a single, comprehensive program. Of all the recommendations, the Study Group feels the in-service training program has the greatest potential for improving the quality of education in District schools.

The Study Group also submitted a proposal for a twelve month school year, divided into four quarters. The Study Group cited curriculum flexibility as well as better use of teachers and buildings as advantages of a four quarter system.

Among its many recommendations, the Study Group endorsed Dr. Passow's suggestions for pre-school education, but strongly urged that high quality be maintained in such classes so that the present inadequacies of the school system are not extended downward into the early years.

The Study Group has been meeting frequently since November and its membership includes representatives of the PTA's and Home & School Associations from the 12 schools in the NI-2B Council area. The Study Group made its recommendations on its own behalf, the recommendations have not been approved or disapproved by any of the organizations in the Group. The Group is continuing to meet and expects to submit a second set of recommendations in April or May.

AGAINST JUNIOR NEIGHBORS, LADIES WIN 11-10, MEN LOSE CLOSE GAME

Who would have thought that a basketball team of Neighbors, Inc. ladies - and all of them mothers, could have beaten the Jr. Neighbors team of healthy, active high school girls? Well, the NI ladies did it, in a closely-fought 11-10 victory. Happy in the flush of victory, the ladies all proudly admitted to being over 30. High scorer for the NI women's team was Peachy Murray; team members were Ethylyn DeStefano, team captain; Sally Peer, Barbara Simmons, Carol Rende, Elma Denham, Ruth Beane.

Although the NI men's team led going into the 4th quarter, youth prevailed as the Junior Neighbors team sunk a late basket to earn 34-32 victory. The men's team captain was Robert Murray, and other team members were Hugh Robinson, Allen Graham, John Martinson, Ed Sharp, John Rende, Ray Hay, Bill Peer, Larry Cuban, Austin Perry and Harry Schafft.

The girl's gym at Coolidge High School was rocking with the shouts of encouragement (and laughter) from the supporters of both teams as the gams were played in an atmosphere of good humor. The games were such a success that a volleyball competition is being considered for the spring.

JUNIOR NEIGHBORS TO VISIT EAST NORTHPORT, LONG ISLAND, NEW YORK

A group of Junior Neighbors have been invited to visit a group of junior and senior high school students in East Northport, Long Island, during Easter Week. The invitation was extended after the two groups met at the Ethical Society on Washington's birthday. The meeting, arranged by the NI office and the US Commission on Civil Rights, produced such an interesting discussion that the visitors extended the reciprocal invitation.

SURVEY BEING CONDUCTED IN NI AREA

The Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies (a respected, non-profit urban research organization) is conducting a study of attitudes of both whites and Negroes on the issue of housing and race. The Neighbors, Inc. area was chosen as one of the study areas because of its integrated neighborhoods. All-white areas of Washington and Maryland suburbs will be used for comparative purposes. The NI office assisted the Center in preparing for the study.

BOUNDARY CONTROVERSY TACKLED

NI Youth on the Move

Junior Neighbors is quickly challenging its parent organization for the "most active" title in the community.

During the first part of the new year this energetic group of high school students has engaged in many exciting and worthwhile projects.

An initial service drive at Christmas time netted 16 boxes of toys, clothes, and other items which were delivered to Hospitality House for distribution to poor District families.

Following their first success, Jr. Neighbors organized a work force of baby-sitters and general workers to service the NI area and raise money for their organization.

On Saturday, January 27 the group turned out in force to clean up the grounds of their high school - Coolidge.

On February 22 Jr. Neighbors met with a group of New York suburban high school students to discuss urban problems and conditions in the Washington, D.C. area.

Always on the move, the Coolidge group is currently planning a basketball game with Neighbors, Inc., as well as a parents night where Jr. & Sr. Neighbors can get together. (See Community Calendar)

Our hats are off to Jr. Neighbors for the fine work they are doing.

Festival Chairman

Maija Hay (Mrs. Raymond) has taken on the enormous task of Chairman for this year's Art and Book Festival. Mrs. Hay, a native of Finland, lives with her husband and three small children on Cedar Street in Takoma, D.C.

Mrs. Hay, who formerly worked as an interpreter with the State Department, is fluent in Finnish, German, Swedish, Italian Spanish and English.

Citing sewing and crafts as her major hobbies, Mrs. Hay has indicated that she considers the Art & Book Festival both a challenge and an opportunity for herself and her family.

Anyone wishing to serve on any committee connected with the Festival may contact Mrs. Hay by calling 882-2910.

A FRIENDLY REMINDER FOR TAX PURPOSES - WHEN DECLARING NEIGHBORS, INC. ALWAYS LIST NORTH WASHINGTON NEIGHBORS, INC. -(Our Official Name)

Neighbors, Inc. has taken a position on the current school boundary issue which looks beyond the present controversy to "the creation of educational excellence in all of the city's schools."

In a two-page, five-point statement approved by the membership at a special meeting on February 19th, Neighbors members indicated that that they see, "the role of community participation in this matter as being one of helping to set goals and guidelines, not of having the responsibility for providing expertise, collecting and analyzing demographic data, or preparing a variety of detailed plans."

In this light, the membership adopted five basic guidelines, which:

1. Support in principle the various methods of school pairings, consortia, educational parks, etc. where they would meaningfully effect racial and socio-economic integration.

2. Oppose the pairing of Wilson-Deal, Paul-Coolidge.

3. Oppose the Superintendent's "cluster" plan for Wilson, Coolidge and Roosevelt.

4. Urge the Board of Education to pursue urban-suburban cooperation, and the use of further capital funds for educational parks.

5. Ask the Board of Education to comply with the spirit as well as the letter of the Wright Decision.

Neighbors also stressed that it "stands ready to assist Mr. Boyd and the Board of Education in any way possible."

"In particular," the statement concluded, NI would welcome the opportunity to serve on a citizens committee, which Mr. Boyd has indicated will be formed, in line with our view of the proper role of citizen participation."

The citizens committee on school boundary changes was appointed by Mr. Boyd the following week, and Mrs. Barbara Simmons, Chairman of the NI Education Committee was named to represent the NI area by Mr. Boyd.

Controversy over Neighbors position and the entire boundary question has made the issue of paramount concern in the Neighbors area as elsewhere in the city. Further discussion of the issues involved will be found on page 2.

Dance Earns -$$$-

By all indications there certainly will be a second annual Washington's Birthday Cabaret-Dance if the success of our first effort is any judge.

Back slapping is in order for the entire Dance Committee which did such a wonderful job.

At last report, the dance, which was attended by well over 300 persons, yielded a profit for Neighbors of over $600.

Special thanks are in order for the Chair-

EDITORIAL

From time to time Neighbors' INK will print editorial opinion on issues of current interest or controversy in the community. At such time it welcomes responses from its readers in the form of letters to the editor, which will be printed in these pages as space permits. All letters must bear the writer's name and address, though they will be withheld upon request.

Editorial opinion found in Neighbors' INK is not necessarily that of the organization.

DELIBERATE SPEED

While urban school systems have been "integrating" at the safe school-zone speed of 25 MPH, white families have been speeding to quality education in the suburbs on the 60 MPH freeways.

The "Deliberate speed" interpretation of the Supreme Court has been the ball and chain around the neck of urban education. Now in the District of Columbia we are being asked to comply with another judicial decision - to swim with that ball and chain.

The membership of Neighbors, Inc. was wise to point to the Skelly-Wright Decision as a moral decision, and to ask the Board of Education to respond to it in this light. As a "Friend of the Court" in the Hobson v. Hansen Case, Neighbors is on record in strong support of the Wright Decision. The question no longer is yes or no, it is how? The academic exercise or "moral compliance" if you will - of drawing school boundaries over and over again is just one more obvious example of the doomed-to-failure, "deliberate speed" approcch to integrated, quality education.

Inner-city community organizations such as CHANGE, Inc. have recognized this reality and have recommended the abolition of all school boundaries. Their logic says that quality education is a reachable goal (though a long way off) in the inner-city, but that "integration" will continue to be a bad joke in the ghetto until the schools are of superior caliber. That logic seems to make sense. Freeways run in both directions, and people will seemingly drive great distances at high speeds for quality education for their children.

Residents of the District of Columbia ought to urge "breackneck speed" in the pursuit of quality education - the only realistic road back to integration.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

In the discussion on education at the NI general meeting (on Fe. 19th), a member stated that then Shepherd Park children reach junior high school age, their parents start thinking of moving. Perhaps it is well to have this rumour out in the open at last, because it is a very destructive one for our schools and for our whole neighborhood. I want to reassure Shepherd Park prents on two counts.

First, the rumour grossly exaggerates the facts. I was able to trace last year's Shepherd sixth grade class, and more than 70 percent are now at Paul Jr. High. This is as many as could be expected in a mobile urban neighborhood like ours.

Second, the qualms that some parents do have about our secondary schools are unnecessary. They are really good schools. Students (and their parents) at Paul and Coolidge seem quite satisfied - even enthusiastic. I have done volunteer work at Paul and find a pleasant and stimulating atmosphere. It's a busy, orderly, lively, purposeful organism. If you don't believe me, go over and see for yourselves.

Finally, I think it is time we stopped apologizing for our schools (except that they're so much better than others?) and started supporting them. If we find a flaw, let's work to correct it; if we find a need, let's work to fill it. That's just good ole American "enlightened self-interest." Let's also keep campaigning for excellent education throughout our delightful, mixed-up, disenfranchised city.

EXPERIMENT IN CREATIVE DRAMATICS

Mrs. Marge Brockman, NI member and former Acting Executive Director of NI, invites all NI members who are interested in the use of dramatic techniques in working with "difficult" youth groups to see a demonstration of what can be accomplished. The program will include readings from "In White America," an original play called "Like It Is," written, acted and produced by a group of young men (17-20) from the Neighborhood Youth Corps in Anacostia, and a rock and roll concert. Performances will be Friday, March 8, and Saturday, March 9. There will be a special performance for invited guests and interested NI members on Wednesday, March 13. All performances will be at Turner Elementary School, Stanton Rd & Alabama Ave. S.E. at 8 PM, admission free. The Wednesday performance will be followed by an informal reception at the WCEP Center at 2250 Railroad Ave. SE. Further information from Mrs. Brockman at 584-4600.

YOUR NEIGHBORS IN THE NEWS...

ESTHER PETERSON - Assistant Secretary of Labor spoke to the annual dinner of Northern Virginia Family Service last month. Prior to her position with the Dept. of Labor she was a special assistant to the President on consumer affairs.

RALPH TEMPLE and MARVIN CAPLAN were both appointed to the District Council on Human Relations by Mayor Walter E. Washington. For Mr. Caplan it was a reappointment.

RUFUS WRIGHT - Coolidge High Senior, was soloist with D.C. Youth Orchestra in program at Coolidge last month. Mr. Wright, who has played with the Capitol Hill Symphony Orchestra, plans to study music, theology and philosophy in college.

ED COGEN, JOSEPH HAIRSTON, CAROLYN JACKSON and ED HOLLANDER - appeared on behalf of Neighbors, Inc. on three hour WOOK-TV Show, "Controversy" to discuss the organization and programs of Neighbors.

WILLIAM L. TAYLOR - staff director of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights was the main speaker at the annual installation banquet of the D.C. Chapter of Japanese Amer. Citizens Lge.

THE REV. ALLAN R. BROCKWAY - is the author of The Secular Saint, just off the presses of Doubleday this month.

JOHN D. THOMPSON - was toastmaster at the 30th anniversary dinner-dance of the Washington Real Estate Brokers Association held at the Washington Hilton, February 24th.

JOANNA VOGELSANG - Washington artist, participated in auction of her paintings along with other artists at the Corcoran Gallery in January.

3RD & RITTENHOUSE EYESORE CONDEMNED

The building pictured above, located at 5200-02 3rd Street, N.W., was condemned by the city's Condemnation Board in January as the result, in part, of Neighbors, Inc's protest over the condition of the building.

Unless there is an appeal of this ruling, the building will have to be repaired or torn down within six months.

The Neighborhood Services Committee, Mrs. Carol Rende, chairman, has been concerned with the use of this building for some time. In July, 1967, Neighbors successfully opposed plans for use of the site as a gas station. And in November the Committee circulated a petition and organized witnesses in our successful opposition to the granting of a liquor license to that site.

The building has been vacant for a considerable time and has become an eyesore and a hazard to our community - one which may now finally be eliminated.

INTEGRATED SAVINGS & LOAN CHARTERED

Dr. Elgin P. Jenkins, Assistant Neighborhood Representative for Shepherd Park, is one of the founders of the Independence Federal Savings & Loan Association. The new institution, the first chartered in the District in 30 years, will have an integrated board of directors. Dr. Jenkins said that no other S&L in the area has any Negroes in policy making positions. He also said that the new institution, to be located near 6th St. and Indiana Ave. N.W., will pay particular attention to the needs of low and moderate income Negro families.

The founders of Independence Federal are now seeking pledges of opening deposits as required by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The Board of Neighbors, Inc. has made such a pledge and decided to call the new institution to the attention of the NI membership. The pledges need not be for large amounts and all savings will be federally insured.

Those interested in further information should call Dr. Jenkins at 726-5926, or 589-7030.

TRINITY EPISCOPAL APPOINTS MRS. ZAHN

Trinity Episcopal Church has announced that it has appointed Mrs. Aileen Shea Zahn to its staff to run a new program of Christian Ministry for the welfare of older people in the parish and in the area nearby the church. Mrs. Zahn is a professional social worker who most recently worked with the Episcopal Diocese of Washington. Those who would like additional information should call Mrs. Zahn at RA 6-7036.

NI SUPPORTS ARLINGTON FAIR HOUSING LAW

At public hearings held by the Arlington County Board, Mrs. Diana Engel, a member of our Real Estate Committee, testified on NI's behalf in support of the adoption of a county fair housing ordinance. Mrs. Engel gave a brief history of the Neighbors, Inc. experience, pointing out that Washington then had no city agency to deal with "blockbusting" and the other tactics which exploit both races. Her statement endorsed the model ordinance prepared by the Northern Virginia Committee for Open Occupancy (COOL) and urged the County to create an effective enforcement agency. Mrs. Engel pointed out that although the District does have a fair housing law, the enforcing agency - the Council on Human Relations - has for years been hampered by lack of staff and funds.

In her concluding remarks, Mrs. Engel said, "A strong ordinance coupled with effective enforcement will stand as a forthright statement that equal opportunity is supported and practiced in Arlington County." To adopt a good law but without strong enforcement would be to risk having the law become, among whites, a joke, and among Negroes, a cruel hoax, her statement said.

NEW RECREATION FACILITY URGED FOR BRIGHTWOOD AREA

Neighbors, Inc. presented a statement to the D.C. Recreation Board in support of any improvements for our area's recreation program in the fiscal year 1970, and called for the establishment of a new recreation facility to serve the Brightwood Elementary School area. Our statement pointed out that the Brightwood playground is open only during the summer. In the winter, when daylight play time is most limited, children living south of Missouri Ave. must cross that heavily-traveled artery, and other streets, in order to go to Ft. Stevens playground.

IN SUPPORT OF RAPID RAIL TRANSIT

NI Executive Director Ed Hollander testified in support of the proposed rapid rail transit plan at a public hearing sponsored by the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority. He also gave support to the recent proposal by the National Capital Planning Commission to alter the B&O-Glenmount route so that it would run under Georgia Ave. all the way to Silver Spring, rather than the present route which slants east from Grant Circle to Riggs Road. Hollander urged that if the subway does run along Georgia Ave. there be stops to serve the Georgia - Missouri intersection and one to serve Walter Reed.

REMINDER The central phone number for the Junior Neighbors job agency is 882-1496 (Miss Beverly White). Babysitters, temporary helpers, etc. Reliable service; reasonable rates.

A Petition for

GUN CONTROL NOW!

TO: The President, Members of Congress, and state government officials

We, the undersigned, favor immediate action to control the sale, possession and use of handguns, rifles and shotguns.

Such federal and state legislation should include the following:

1. Regarding rifles and shotguns, there should be a ban on mail-order sales to individuals, on sales to those under 18, and on out-of-state purchases.

2. All firearms possessed, sold or transferred should be registered at the state and/or national level.

3. States should require that gun purchases be made only through permits calling for adequate identification and a waiting period for a police check.

This we urge in the name of President John F. Kennedy, Senator Robert F. Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King, the 6,500 others killed annually, and in the name of a more civilized and less violent United States society.

NI ELECTION RESULTS

At the NI annual meeting held on May 22nd, Edward S. Cogen was re-elected President of NI. A separate motion thanking him for his service to the organization was unanimously adopted and accompanied by a round of applause. Vice-President Joseph Hairston and Secretary Gregory Swanson were also re-elected. Mrs. Marcy Fenner was elected to the post of Treasurer, replacing Mrs. Elma Denham who chose not to run again after serving several years in that position.

The slate of candidates prepared by the Nominating Committee for the six Director-Chairman positions was elected; they are Mrs. Diana Engel, Alfred Augustus, Robert Skinner, Raymond Hay, Mrs. Carol Rende, and Robert Bowser. Each of the six will be named as chairman of a committee by President Cogen. All of the officers and the Director-Chairmen were elected to two-year terms.

SIMMONS NOMINATING COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

From among nearly a dozen nominations, the annual meeting elected four non-director members to one-year terms on the Nominating Committee; the four are Samuel Simmons, Mrs. Thelma Lee, Joseph Jacques and Mrs. Sylvia Schlitt. Mr. Simmons is chairman of the Committee by virtue of receiving the most votes. A tie vote between Mr. Jacques and Harvey Bullock was later broken when Mr. Bullock was elected as the Takoma Neighborhood Representative, a Board of Directors position which made him ineligible to serve as a non-director member of the Nominating Committee. At its next meeting the Board will elect three director members to the Committee who will also serve one-year terms.

BULLOCK TAKOMA NEIGHBORHOOD REP

At a meeting of the Takoma area members immediately following the annual meeting, Harvey Bullock was elected as the neighborhood's representative to the NI Board of Directors, to fill the balance of the 1967-69 term. Mr. Bullock lives at 429 Whittier St., NW, and his phone number is 882-0463.

At a meeting of Manor Park members, Mrs. Evelyn Sellers was elected to the post of assistant neighborhood representative, also to fill the balance of the 1967-69 term. Both Mr. Bullock and Mrs. Sellers have long been active in NI; in addition, Mrs. Sellers is NI's office secretary. Her address is

ALL NI MEMBERS INVITED TO RECEPTION FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 21, 8:00 PM

FESTIVAL SPONSORS INCLUDE SEN. BROOKE, ART BUCHWALD, WALTER WASHINGTON

The Sixth Annual Art and Book Festival will open at 8 PM on Friday, June 21 at Coolidge High School with the reception to which all NI members and their friends are invited. The Honorary Sponsors for this year's Festival include, Mayor Walter Washington, Sen. Edward Brooke, Art Buchwald, Sol Linowitz, Secretary Alan Boyd, Charlie Byrd, Sen. Walter Mondale, Esther Peterson, Rep. John Conyers and a number of other distinguished persons.

The Festival will include the traditional art exhibits and sale, and thousands of books. A number of new features have been added to this year's Festival and one of them will be the sale of lunch and dinner platters ($1 for adults and 75¢ for children) featuring special dishes as well as ham, fried chicken, etc. In addition to the outdoor rides and free movies for children (including "The Red Balloon," "Clay," and "Doughnuts") a new children's event will be the paint-in on Sunday at 1 PM. For 10¢ per entry kids may paint a picture and have it hung and judged; ribbons will be awarded to the winners. Magicians and folksingers will also be on hand to entertain the little ones.

The crafts exhibits have been expanded this year and will include demonstrations in enameling, weaving, glass cutting and the potters wheel. Among the potters and ceramics craftsmen who will exhibit are Solveig Cox, Pauline Eis, and David Francke. Other booths will be by the Gallery de Gaines, and the Gambit Gallery which, in addition to ceramics and pottery, will take orders for the framing of prints and posters purchased at the Festival. Young Playways' booth will have the latest in educational and quality toys. The display by the Bowl and Board will feature woodcrafts and the Sandal Shop will have their sandals, belts and handbags on sale and will provide a demonstration in leather working. Hinckley & Brohel will have their popular ceramics and an interesting collection of prints. African Highlights will show their crafts accesories and fabrics. Toast and

VOLUNTEERS WILL BE NEEDED to help set up the Festival. Would you come to Coolidge at 7 PM on Wednesday, June 19, or Thursday, June 20? Your help will be much appreciated and it can be fun, too.

JUNE 17 REGISTRATION FOR SUMMER YOUTH PROGRAM AT TAKOMA, WHITTIER, SHEPHERD AND COOLIDGE

The Area 1 Summer Youth Program will have registration on Monday, June 17 all day at the four schools involved in its program - Takoma, Whittier and Shepherd Elementary Schools, and at Coolidge High School. The program's activities, which will include participation in the Interior Department's "Summer in the Parks" program, will have team sports at Coolidge, including basketball, softball, volleyball, track, touch football, and soccer - for both girls and boys .

The elementary schools will have a variety of crafts such as enameling, clay, ceramics, paper mache, and will include games and special events such as pet shows and marshmallow roasts.

The program will serve children and youth ranging in age from approximately 5 to 18. Mrs. Barbara Simmons is chairman of the Area 1 Neighborhood Planning Council, sponsor of the program.

DANCE FOR PPC SUNDAY, JUNE 16

The Spanish American Committee for the Poor People's Campaign is sponsoring a dance on Sunday, June 16, 5-11 PM with the proceeds to go to the PPC. Featuring 3 bands, the dance will be held at the Gavan Center of the Sacred Heart Church, 16th St. and Park Road, NW. Tickets are $4 per person and can be purchased at the door. BYOL, set-ups available; further information at 347-1429 or 265-1382.

MOTHERS MARCH

The Board of NI endorsed the Welfare Mothers March (held on Mother's Day) and a number of NI members participated. Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr. led the march, sponsored by the National Welfare Rights Organization and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

CUBAN TO TITLE III ADVISORY BOARD

In a special election Larry Cuban was chosen to be NI's representative to the Advisory Board of the Institute for Educational Development, also informally called the "University of Maryland Plan." Further information appears below. Cuban, a teacher at Roosevelt High School, will shortly assume a new post, Director of the Race and Education unit of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. He was recently appointed by President Johnson to the 14-member Advisory Committee on the Teacher Corps.

MARVIN CAPLAN ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF TITLE III ADVISORY BOARD

At its first formal meeting the Advisory Board of the Institute for Educational Development adopted its by-laws and elected officers. The chairman of the Board is Marvin Caplan who served as chairman of the NI Education sub-committee which helped prepare the application which resulted in the $100,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education to establish the Institute. As reported above, Larry Cuban is NI's representative to the Board.

The other officerselected are Mrs. Schuman, a teacher at Coolidge, Vice-Chairman; and John Coleman, the parent representative from Whittier, Secretary. A freeze of Office of Education funds is currently holding up the delivery of the grant but it is hoped that the Institute will begin operations in time for the Fall opening of school.

The Advisory Board will meet the second Thursday of each month. The July 11th and August 8th meetings will be held at Whittier at 7:30 PM. The meetings of the Board are open to the public.

The purposes of the Institute are to:
(a) develop the competencies of the educational staff in the schools
(b) explore and research the establishment of an interim decentralized organization for the program, and
(c) develop these programs as a cooperative endeavor of the community, its schools and the University of Maryland.

The Institute is designed to serve as the mechanism for a continuing study of the NI area schools and their needs and means of introducing into the schools innovations in teaching techniques.

The seven NI area schools involved are Coolidge High, Paul and Rabaut Junior Highs, and Takoma, Brightwood, Whittier and Shepherd Elementary schools.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19th
SOLIDARITY DAY MARCH
POOR PEOPLE'S CAMPAIGN

GLAZER SINGS, PARTY SWINGS

As advertised, the Joe Glazer sing-a-long held on May 25th provided a wonderful evening to a full house of NI area residents. The house which was filled with the delighted guests was the lovely home of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Peterson. We owe a hearty thanks to the Petersons for opening their home to us and for serving as most gracious host and hostesses. Many thanks also go to Joe Glazer for his fine benefit performance.

In addition to being a social and artistic success, the evening also netted NI about $400 of much needed funds. Mr. Lloyd Genus and the P. Ballantine and Sons Co. also deserve our thanks for their generous donation of beer and ale for the evening's refreshments.

NEW GLAZER RECORD RELEASED

Joe Glazer's latest record, his 12th, has just been released by Sound Studios of Washington. The new release, "My Darling Party Line," contains Glazer's songs about radical American politics of the past and Abe Brumberg's humorous songs on current Soviet themes.

SUNDIAL PROGRAM AT TAKOMA REC CENTER

Mr. Charles Butler, director of the Takoma Recreation Center, has announced that registration for the Sundial Program will be held June 10 to 14 at the Center, 3rd and Van Buren Sts. N.W. The Program is for ages 3 to 5 and is held 5 days a week in the morning, 9-12. The sessions run for 2 weeks and there is a fee of $7 for each session. Children may be enrolled in as many sessions as they like. Activities in this popular program include storytelling, drama, music, games, arts and crafts, nature walks, etc. Children are picked up from their homes or from a pick-up point near home. For further information, call Mr. Butler, RA 3-8222.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "A NEIGHBOR"

We wrote to the Sanitation Department about your complaint concerning conditions in a part of the 300 block of Rittenhouse St. N.W. The Sanitation Dept. tells us that this particular type of complaint is under the jurisdiction of the Housing Division of the Department of Licenses and Inspections and that the matter has been referred to them. We in NI have noted some improvement in the conditions which you complained about and hope you have too. If things are still not satisfactory, write us again.

SAVE OCTOBER 5th FOR NI BENEFIT

Believe in planning ahead? Save Saturday, October 5th for NI's benefit which will feature brilliant young pianist Andre Watts, to be held at Constitution Hall. Further information later.

IN SUPPORT OF POLICE CONSOLIDATION

The NI Board of Directors has adopted a position in support of the plan to consolidate the District's 14 police precincts. The Board took the action in March and in early June Robert Skinner presented testimony at the City Council hearing on the issue. Skinner said the police should have the management tools and administrative flexibility they need to carry out their functions. He pointed out that the current 14 precinct plan came into being more than 50 years ago, before the existence of the radio, telephone and automobile. Administratively, the Police Department needs to move into the 20th Century, he argued.

Skinner's statement also supported consolidation because it will free policemen from office duties and allow them to do more patrol work, thus reducing overhead and the costs of running the Department. Under the consolidation plan, which is supported by the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the 6th precinct (roughly the same as the NI area) will be merged with the 10th, and will be housed in a new building to be built at Georgia Avenue and Peabody St. N.W.

YOUR NEIGHBORS IN THE NEWS

DR. EUPHEMIA L. HAYNES has been reappointed to the Board of Education by the U.S. District Court. She will serve until next January 27 when the first elected school board is sworn in. She has been a member of the board since 1960.

JOHN D. THOMPSON, President of Vijon Realty, has become a member of the Washington Board of Realtors.

CHARLA FREEMAN, a fourth-grader at Shepherd School, is narrator of "Peter and the Wolf" for the Baltimore Symphony's series of 16 youth concerts (in Baltimore). She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Freeman.

LARRY CUBAN has been named to the Advisory Committee on the Teacher Corps by President Johnson.

A number of NI members participated in the Channel 26 WETA-TV programs sponsored by the Board of Education's Executive Study Group and the Community Council for the study of the Passow Report held in April and May; they're:

MRS. BARBARA L. SIMMONS
LARRY CUBAN
MRS. CAROLYN JACKSON
MRS. DEBORAH MATORY
MRS. MARCIA KALLEN
DAN SAFRAN

J. HERMAN DAVES was elected Director of the Wilson College Fathers Club. His daughter, Cheryl Denise, is a member of the class of 1970 at the 4 year women's college located in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania.

MARVIN CAPLAN was a speaker at the Capital Press Club's 25th Anniversary Institute.

NI area youngsters and adults have participated in several musical events recently. Youngsters JONATHAN KRONSTADT, SERGEI PACHT, and BRETT WORMLEY performed with the Cathedral Choral Society in Bach's St. Matthew Passion, given with the National Symphony Orchestra. Performing in the National Oratorio Society's 7th Annual Bach Festival were MRS. DIANA ENGEL, JANET and NORMAN BROWN, MRS. SARINA HIRSHFELD, DR. and MRS. NTINOS MYRIANTHOPOLOUS, and MRS. RUTH COGEN.

COUNCILMEN THOMPSON & TURNER ASSIGNED TO DISTRICT 1, INCLUDES NI AREA

The City Council has voluntarily established 4 councilmanic districts and assigned two councilmen to each district (or "ward," although they are not, of course, election wards). District 1, which includes the NI area, covers a large section of the far northwest and northeast. Councilmen William S. Thompson and J.C. Turner are assigned to District 1.

Under the Council's recent committee organization Councilman Thompson is chairman of the Committee on Public Safety and serves on the following other committees: Housing and Urban Development; Regulations, Licenses and Government Operations; Health and Welfare; Citizen Information and Complaints; and Personnel and Office Operations.

Councilman Turner is chairman of the Committee on Regulations, Licenses and Government Operations, and is a member of the following committees, Education; Manpower and Economic Development; Housing and Urban Development; Consumer Affairs; and Rules and Procedures. Both men will serve on the Appropriations and Revenue Committees and, on a rotating basis, on the Legislation Committee.

Committees on which neither District 1 councilmen serve are those on Recreation and Youth Programs; Highways and Transportation; and Planning.

OPPOSE ZONING CHANGE AT 12th & EASTERN AVE.

NI circulated petitions of opposition and presented testimony against the zoning change requested for the southeastern corner of the intersection of 12th St. and Eastern Ave. NW. The change would be from R-1-B (residential) to C-2-A (commercial) and was vigorously opposed by NI members and residents in that area. The reason for the requested change in zoning has not been made public by the owner of the property. (Under the zoning regulations he is not required to do so.) NI and the area residents feel that any commercial use of the property would be detrimental to the immediately adjacent residential neighborhood.

At the public hearing on May 29 conducted by the District Zoning Commission NI submitted petitions containing the signatures of 34 persons who live within a 2-block radius of the property. In addition, Mrs. Carol Rende, chairman of the Neighborhood Services Committee of NI, presented testimony opposing the change. She cited the zoning history of the property back to 1959. During this period requests to build a bank have twice been denied and permission for a parking lot has also been refused.

NI MEMBERS HELP FORM FAST DAY COMMITTEE

NI members were instrumental in forming the Government Employees Fast Day Committee which is urging government employees to go without lunch on June 14 and to donate the money saved to the Poor People's Campaign. Serving as chairman, secretary and treasurer are, respectively, Jacob Schlitt, Laurence D. Pearl, and Samuel J. Simmons. Mrs. Caroline Agard, also an NI member, has managed the Committee's office. Contributions, which will go to the PPC, may still be sent to the GEFDC at P.O. Box 13025, T Street Station, Washington, D.C. 20009. For further information, call 265-1382.

There is coaching for all the athletic activities and a schedule of games and practice sessions.

Schedules are kept flexible to be able to take advantage of the "Surprise Trips" planned by the Summer in the Parks program and other excursions and special events. Supervised trips are arranged daily to the Takoma pool from each center. One day a week has special craft events such as copper enameling and other more involved activities are arranged by the traveling experts.

Fort Slocum Park is the Area 1 center for the Summer in the Parks Program. Courts for volleyball and badminton, a picnic area with grills, a soft ball diamond and stage are all available. There are movies, jazz shows, puppet shows and other special events planned throughout the summer. A concession stand is being operated daily by the Neighborhood Planning Council. The four Area Centers will be using the Park for some aspects of their programs but it is open to the public as well, of course. The whole summer fun program will run until August 31st.

JULY 4th DEFEAT BRINGS CHALLENGE FROM JUNIOR NEIGHBORS TEAM

Highlight of the annual July 4th picnic at the Takoma Recreation Center was an 11 inning struggle between the aching bones of Neighbors, Inc. and the Junior Neighbors All-Stars.

The old men surprised their younger opponents by jumping out to an early 8-0 lead, but the old-timers were caught from behind and tied in the eigth inning. Senior Neighbors pulled it out in the bottom of the 11th inning, however, to hand Junior Neighbors their first defeat of the season, 9-8.

July 14th, Junior Neighbors demanded a return match which ended in the score 27-11 . . . again in favor of the old-timers.

As this newsletter goes to press it is uncertain whether the Jr. NI team intends to challenge the old pros again or not.

DID YOU COOK FOR THE A&B FESTIVAL? ? ? ?

Missing a pot or dish? Mrs. Elma Denham till has several unclaimed items from the festival. You can get your dish or pot back by calling her evenings at 723-5652.

A few additional miscellaneous items are still waiting to be claimed in the Festival's Lost and Found". For everything except pots and dishes call the NI office, 726-3454.

MORE FESTIVAL THANKS ...

...TO the NEW WORLD SINGERS who performed so marvelously at the Friday evening reception, and who donated their services to the Festival. Anyone interested in engaging their services may contact Mr. Paul Wood at 32-4492.

... TO THE ESQUIRE BAND, which performed in the Saturday Talent Show. The Band is available for summer bookings; write Billy Pierce, 3637 Warder Street, N.W.

THERE WILL BE NO AUGUST ISSUE OF THE INK publication will resume with the September issue.

ART & BOOK FESTIVAL BIG SUCCESS

No question about it, this year's Art & Book Festival was one of the most successful ever. Although no final figures are available as yet, NI executive director, Ed Hollander indicates that net returns should be in the neighborhood of $5,000.

Thanks are in order to the hundreds of people who are responsible for making the Festival so successful. Mrs. Maija Hay, General Chairman, deserves a special round of applause from the entire NI area.

Three special thanks also to Bob Murray, Physical Arrangements Chairman; Mrs. Peachy Murray, Children's Art Chairman; and Mrs. Blanche Bradley, Garden Booth Chairman, whose names were left out of the program by error.

Grateful appreciation is also extended to artists Phyllis Schwartz, Charlotte Alford, Alexander Russo, and Ming Wang.

Two NI area artists whose work was on exhibit at the festival donated the proceeds of some of their work to the Poor People's Campaign. Mrs. Joanna Vogelsang and Mrs. Maria Tourangeau both donated paintings in the name of Neighbors to be sold for the benefit of SCLC.

Neighbors would also like to take this opportunity to thank the following merchants for their generous contributions to the Art & Book Festival this year:

Banner Liquors, and Mrs. Morton Banner; Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Store; Posins' Bakery-Delicatessen; Mr. Donut; Hofberg"s Delicatessen; Danny's Pastry Shoppe; Avignone Freres Caterers; Safeway Stores; Hechinger's Stores; Cork and Bottle Liquors; The Art Shop and Gallery; District News Company; Marboro Books; and the Kennedy 5&10¢ Store.

Acknowledgements also to The Kiplinger Association; Mr. Arthur, Principal, Montgomery Cliffs Junior High School; The Washington Ethical Society; the Arlington Unitarian Church; and the Rockville Civic Center.

Without the help of all of these individuals, organizations and businesses, the Art and Book Festival could never have been the wonderful event that it was.

YOUR NEIGHBORS IN THE NEWS

* NI Board Member, John D. Thompson, President of the Vijon Realty Company was elected President of the Washington Real Estate Brokers Association at their recent Annual Election Meeting.

Mr. Thompson, who has been an active member and supporter of Neighbors for years, also serves as Chairman, Board of Trustees at Zion Baptist Church, and is a member of the Metropolitan Washington Board of Trade, Washington Board of Realtors and many other civic and social organizations.

* Richard A. Salem, regional director of the Washington SBA office, who recently announced the establishment of a special program to help small businessmen in Northeast Washington.

* NI residents Edward L. Ericson, and Ralph J. Temple, along with former NI executive director, Mrs. Marjorie Brockman, all of whom had letters to the editor appearing in Washington Newspapers recently.

* Rabbi A. Nathan Abramowitz, spiritual leader of Tifereth Israel Congregation, 7701 16th St. N.W., cited for being one of the first Jewish professors at Georgetown U.

* Mrs. Charles Perry, Sr., NI resident and member, who was recently elected Chairman of the District of Columbia for the United Nations Assiciation, Capital Area Division.

DEFEAT OF ZONING CHANGE WON

Opposition brought by Neighbors against a change from residential to commercial zoning at 12th and Eastern Avenue aided in the defeat of the requested change.

As reported in the last newsletter, petitions containing the signatures of 34 persons who live within a 2-block radius of the property, along with testimony by Mrs. Carol Rende, influenced the decision of the Zoning Commission.

Mrs. Rende, Chairman of the Neighborhood Services Committee, reports that two further appeals for zoning changes are also now being opposed by Neighbors, one at 1200 Tewkesbury Pl. N.W., the other at 7445 Georgia Avenue.

NEIGHBORS JOIN SOLIDARITY DAY; SUPPORT POOR PEOPLE'S CAMPAIGN

Although the June 19th March in support of the Poor People's Campaign came just a few days before the NI Art and Book Festival, many, many members joined in the Solidarity Day events.

In addition, NI members and visitors to the Festival contributed over $230 to the PPC in the form of outright contributions and in pin and poster sales.

VASES FOR FREEDMAN'S HOSPITAL

An NI member has taken on, all by herself, the commendable project of collecting vases for Freedman's Hospital. When taking flowers to a friend recently, Mrs. Cora Pope found that there are no vases for patients to put their flowers in. Mrs. Pope feels sure that NI members have vases they would be glad to donate and she will pick them up from you if you call her, evenings at 882-6822.

ICE CREAM TRUCK REGULATIONS REVISED

If the jingling sound from ice cream trucks has been getting on your nerves, it may be helpful to know that vendors are licensed by the city and are subject to the Police Regulations and have recently been amended by the Mayor and City Council. Here are some of the major ones which apply in residential areas:

1. Vendors are to ply their trade only between the hours of 7 AM and 10 PM and on Sundays only between 1 PM and 9 PM.
2. Vendors are to remain in any one place only for the length of time it takes to make the sales after having been stopped for that purpose.
3. Vendors are not to interfere with traffic or cause annoyance to residents or passersby.

STUDENT LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE PLANNED

Plans are now underway to offer the students at Paul Junior High an unusual opportunity for leadership training this fall. To be known as the Paul Leadership Conference, the event is planned as a 4-day affair to involve between 50 & 75 students from all three grades.

Mrs. Miriam Platig, key planner for the event, indicates that the central idea behind the Leadership Conference is to provide a forum for potential leaders to consider issues of social change in depth with professional resource people from the community.

Mrs. Platig also says that all kinds of help are urgently needed to complete plans for the Conference. If you are interested in aiding this exciting venture call Mrs. Platig at 723-9547.

BICYCLE REGISTRATION
(See insert for schedule of times & places)

The 6th Precinct has asked us to announce that since 1963 it has been the law that all bicycles be registered. The purpose of the law is to aid the police in the recovery of stolen bicycles and to apprehend those responsible. The registration is also useful in returning the bicycles to their rightful owners. It has been the practice of the 6th Precinct to conduct bicycle registration on Saturdays, 8 AM-4 PM at the station house. Now it has been decided to register bicycles at the various schools and playgrounds located in the 6th Precinct. This will be done in order to obtain more full comppliance with the law and as a convenience to the area's residents.

On the insert enclosed with the newsletter is a schedule of times and places where bicycles may be registered.

AREA PLAY STREETS NAMED

The following streets have been designated as play streets for use in the Street Shower Program by the Department of Highways and Traffic:

...TO Craft exhibitor, Merry Eustis for donating a large box of her plastic coated paper flowers. These attractive colorful decorations are now on sale at the NI office, small - 65¢, 2 for $1; large - $1 each.

PLAN AHEAD

We've already suggested that you set aside the date of Saturday, October 5th for the fabulous Andre Watts benefit concert at Constitution Hall, but if you're wondering what to do with the rest of the month why not sign up now to work in the fall membership drive.

Mrs. Barbara Cuban, Membership Chairman wants your help in the drive which will run from October 7th through the 28th. If you can join this important effort please call her at 882-0986.

Mrs. Cuban right now is looking particularly for new NI residents who may be renting in the area. If you know of a new neighbor who is renting, send her name along to Mrs. Cuban so that she can greet them on behalf of Neighbors.

FALSE ALARMS

The Fire Department indicates that an increasing number of false alarms are being set in the NI area, and urges NI residents to report any information concerning them to the Department.

Fire Boxes are now being sprayed with a luminous substance in an effort to detect the suspected young offenders.

SENIOR CITIZENS INVITATION

The Senior Citizens of the Washington Ethical Society are inviting all interested persons in the NI area to visit and join their monthly activities. Open to all, the programs are held at 7750 16th St. N.W. (Corner Kalmia Rd.) For further info, call Mrs. Ross 829-3511.

PUBLIC HOUSING BACKED BY NI AT PUBLIC HEARING

Mrs. Carol Rende, Chairman of the Neighborhood Services Committee, presented the Board-approved endorsement of the Georgia Avenue public housing project for the elderly before a hearing officer for Mayor Washington on July 9th.

In her statement, Mrs. Rende said, "we hope that the Georgia Avenue site will be approved, and we look forward to having the new residents in our community and will welcome them to our area as we do all new residents."

The 48 unit project will be located between Butternut and Dahlia Streets, N.W. on Georgia Avenue.

SCHOOL BOARD CANDIDATES to SPEAK OCT. 16

AREA SELECTED FOR PILOT STREET CLEANING PROGRAM

In response to the many complaints of area residents about the decline in street cleaning services, Neighbors, Inc. has undertaken with the D.C. Sanitation Dept. to design an improved street cleaning program that will really get and keep the streets in our area clean, by using an alternate-side parking system.

The area selected for the pilot program will be a 15 square block section of Manor Park bounded by Sheridan, 5th, and Oglethorpe Sts., and Blair Rd. N.W. Mrs. Carol Rende, chairman of NI's Neighborhood Services Committee which has been working on this project, reports that a starting date has not been set but that the program should be in operation during the fall.

The alternate-side parking plan will allow the D.C. Sanitation Department's equipment to clean streets thoroughly on a regular, weekly schedule. Two days a week between the hours of 9:30 AM and 2 PM the alternate-side parking restrictions will be in effect. The daytime hours should present a minimum inconvenience to residents in the pilot program area. The Department of Highways and Traffic will install metal signs with the parking restriction information.

This program is believed to be the first use of alternate-side parking in the District, although other major cities have used the method for years.

JUNIOR NEIGHBORS BEGINS FALL PROGRAM

Junior Neighbors started its Fall activities with a camp out at Olney, Maryland at the end of August. At their meetings in September they began to plan a program with more community involvement projects. Their first such activity was distributing leaflets on Sunday, October 6 in the pilot street cleaning area. The group is also planning a dance for November 30 the proceeds of which will be used to buy supplemental books for use in Coolidge High's English classes.

SPORTS SHORTS

The Woody Bartges All Stars beat the Decatur St. Midgets by a 7-6 score in the opening game of the 90 lb. football league.

TO BE HELD AT PAUL JUNIOR HIGH

Neighbors, Inc. is sponsoring a nonpartisan public meeting to provide residents of this area an opportunity to hear the candidates for the Board of Education state their views and qualifications. The meeting will be held on Wednesday, October 16, 8 PM, at Paul Junior High School, 8th and Oglethorpe Sts. NW. Both the at-large candidates and those running from the 4th Ward have been invited. Mrs. Barbara Simmons, chairman of NI's Education Committee, urges all area residents to attend so they will be informed about the candidates in the District's first local election in this century.

Cosponsoring the meeting with NI are the Brightwood Civic Association, the Area 2-B PTA Council, the Northwest Boundary Civic Association, the South Manor Neighborhood Association, and the Civic League of North Portal Estates.

The NI Education Committee will meet immediately following the meeting to consider possible endorsement of candidates. The following evening, October 17, the NI Board of Directors will hold a special meeting called by President Ed Cogen to consider the committee's recommendation and take action on the endorsement of candidates. As are all NI Board meetings, this one will be open to all members. It will be held at Trinity Episcopal Church, Piney Branch Rd. and Dahlia St., NW, 8:30 PM.

NI WINS TWO ZONING CASES

Neighbors, Inc., representing the interests of area residents, won two recent cases before the Board of Zoning Adjustment. NI successfully opposed the requested zoning variance of the National Savings and Trust to permit the storage of used cars at 1200 Tewkesbury Pl. NW. Residents of the Brightwood neighborhood were particularly concerned with this case which could have created an unsightly feature.

Even after the BZA denied the variance, the bank continued to store repossessed cars on the lot. NI notified the Zoning Administrator of the situation and he promptly secured compliance with the BZA order. We are pleased to report that cars are no longer being stored on the lot.

In the second case, Bowman Motors sought variances to extend used car sales and display

35 feet into a residential district and to establish an employee's parking lot in the 7400 block of Georgia Ave. NI opposed both requests in testimony before the Board and both variances were denied.

ATTENTION RESIDENTS 3rd & RITTENHOUSE AREA

That eyesore on the northwest corner will be torn down soon. The D.C. government has awarded a demolition contract and the work permit should be issued soon. NI worked - successfully - to have the building condemned and now we are finally about to be rid of it.

NEW THEATER OPENS ON KENNEDY ST.

The Polemic Theater has opened at 1365 Kennedy St. NW, putting on both plays and musicals. For ticket information call 726-5064. We've had no reports yet on their productions. Would anyone care to be drama critic for the INK?

FAUNTROY TO ADDRESS FAIR HOUSING MEETING

The Rev. Walter E. Fauntroy will speak at the annual meeting of Suburban Maryland Fair Housing on Monday, October 14, 8 PM. The meeting will be held in Cedar Lane Unitarian Church, Bethesda. Fauntroy is Vice Chairman of D.C.'s City Council and a Director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. The public is invited.

SCHOOL BOARD CANDIDATES MEETINGS

In addition to the NI-sponsored meeting with Board of Education candidates on Oct. 16, the following other meetings will also be held. All start at 8 PM.

SCHOOL HEIGHT HELD TO 60 FEET; NI TESTIMONY SEEN EFFECTIVE

The D.C. Zoning Commission, in revising the zoning regulations affecting schools, adopted a maximum height of 60 feet for schools in R-1 and R-2 Districts rather than 90 feet as had been proposed. Neighbors, Inc. suggested the 60' limit in testimony presented to the Commission's public hearing. Schools in R-3 through R-5-B Districts will have a 90' maximum. NI supported the other proposed changes, which were adopted, which are designed to permit the Board of Education greater flexibility in the design and location of school buildings.

NI BACKS SCHOOL BOARD CANDIDATES HOBSON, SESSIONS, MOORE AT-LARGE; MRS. ALEXANDER IN WARD

PUBLIC MEETING ATTRACTS LARGE AUDIENCE

The public meeting with at-large and 4th ward candidates for the Board of Education was a big success, attracting an audience of well over 200 making it one of the largest such meetings in the city. All 15 candidates were present although one, James Jackson an at-large candidate, surprised everyone by announcing he did not wish to speak. Each of the other candidates made a five minute talk and then the floor was opened to audience questions. The meeting was held at Paul Jr. High on October 16 and was chaired by Mrs. Ruth Pearl in the absence of Education Committee Chairman Mrs. Barbara Simmons who was out of town.

The meeting represented an example of successful cooperation among civic and educational groups in the 4th Ward as seven other organizations joined Neighbors, Inc. in sponsoring the meeting. Received too late to announce in the earlier October newsletter were the cosponsorship agreements from the Coolidge and Roosevelt Home and School Assns. The others cosponsoring the meeting were the Area 2-B PTA Council, the Brightwood Civic Assn., the Northwest Boundary Civic Assn., the Civic League of North Portal Estates, and the South Manor Neighborhood Association. Special mention is due the Northwest Boundary Civic Assn. whose name was accidentally left off the meeting flyer.

JUNIOR NEIGHBORS ALSO ENDORSES HOBSON, SESSIONS & MOORE, BUT BACKS MATORY IN WARD

Junior Neighbors, NI's active youth affiliate, sent a delegation to hear the candidates and came up with its own endorsements. They are supporting the same at-large candidates as NI but, seemingly in the spirit of the times, they differ with their elders on the NI Board and have endorsed Mrs. Deborah L. Matory for the 4th ward seat on the school board. Several weeks ago the group decided to take an active part in the campaign and they now plan to meet with Mrs. Matory and campaign on behalf of her and the three at-large candidates.

NEW PHONE FOR JOB AGENCY

The job agency run by Junior Neighbors now has a new phone number, 726-6475, the home of Tim and Jim Thomas. It is set up as a central agency for such jobs as baby sitting, window washing, yard work, etc.

NI BOARD MAKES ENDORSEMENTS

The Neighbors, Inc. Board of Directors has endorsed four candidates for the D.C. Board of Education. For the representative of the 4th ward, in which the NI area lies, the Board endorsed Mrs. Muriel M. Alexander, a retired principal, from among the six candidates seeking the position. For the three at-large seats Neighbors is supporting Dr. John A. Sessions, a current school board member; Julius Hobson, long-time school critic; and the Rev. Douglas Moore, a civil rights leader and former teacher. Backgrounds on all four candidates are on page 2.

The endorsements were announced by NI President Ed Cogen following a special Board meeting held on Oct. 17. The NI Education Committee met the previous night, following the public meeting at Paul, to prepare its recommendations to the NI Board. The Committee recommended the three at-large candidates endorsed by the Board, but for the 4th ward seat the Committee's recommendation was Mrs. Deborah Matory. The Committee also recommended that the Board not endorse more than three at-large candidates and not more than one ward candidate.

AT-LARGE CANDIDATES ON RADIO & TV

The at-large candidates will speak on WAMU-FM (88.5 on FM dial) on Thursday, Oct. 31 and Friday, Nov. 1. The half-hour programs will be broadcast at 4:30 PM and then repeated at 11 PM. The non-commercial station at American University is providing the time free.

The at-large candidates will also appear on WETA-TV, Channel 26, on Thursday, Oct. 31 from 9 to 10 PM. They will give brief statements and then be questioned by education writers from local papers.

CANDIDATES TO SPEAK AT PUBLIC MEETINGS

All of the following meetings begin at 8 PM.

Mon. Oct. 28	MacFarland Junior High Iowa Ave. & Webster St. NW 4th ward and at-large candidates
Tues. Oct. 29	Coolidge High School 5th & Tuckerman Sts. NW 4th ward and at-large candidates
Wed. Oct. 30	Sharpe Health School 13th & Upshur Sts. NW at-large candidates only

BACKGROUNDS OF NI-ENDORSED BOARD OF EDUCATION CANDIDATES

DR. JOHN A. SESSIONS At-Large candidate. A member of the Board of Education for two years and the only incumbent supported by NI; by profession an education specialist for the AFL-CIO; widely recognized as a champion of innovative and liberal school policies; as a member of the Board of Education he has helped move the school system in the direction of team teaching, non-graded classes, relevant curriculum, educational parks, decentralized and community-controlled schools and individualized instruction.

JULIUS W. HOBSON At-large candidate. Out-spoken and widely-known critic of the D.C. schools, filed successful Hobson v. Hansen suit which NI supported by filing its own friend-of-the-court brief; suit resulted in Wright decision outlawing teacher segregation, the track system and unequal per pupil expenditures; economist by profession; has been PTA and civic association president, vice-president of D.C. Federation of Civic Associations, chairman of D.C. CORE chapter; supports greater community control, staff development, new building designs and other reforms.

REV. DOUGLAS E. MOORE At-large candidate. Former teacher, civil rights activist in the South; currently Assistant Shaw Project Director, D.C. Redevelopment Land Agency; a vice-president of D.C. Citizens for Better Public Education and member of National Committee for support of the Public Schools; former President of Leakville, North Carolina NAACP Chapter; a founder and former Board member of Southern Christian Leadership Conference; supports decentralization and community involvement, improved budget procedures, staff development and a performing arts high school.

MRS. MURIEL M. ALEXANDER 4th Ward candidate. Now retired, she established an excellent record as Principal of Kelly Miller Junior High; also a former teacher and guidance counsellor; has worked in elementary through senior high schools in D.C.; a founder of the Washington Urban League and past president of its Board of Directors; for five years chairman of Commissioners Youth Council for Area Z; is a member of the Board of Northeast-Southeast Branch of YWCA; supports smaller classes, staff development, curriculum revision and community schools open seven days a week with extended hours. EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Dear Member:

The 1968 - 69 membership campaign is now underway. As we did last year - in our most successful membership drive to date - we are "billing" our members for the annual dues in the expectation that their prompt and generous responses will allow our Membership Committee to devote its energies to the important task of gaining new members. For this plan to succeed, however, we need your help.

Your generous support in recent years has helped provide us with the financial means to fulfill our ambitious goals. But as we have matured our ambitions have grown - and so have our monetary needs. The enclosed copy of NI's Annual Report for 1968 highlights the work we have accomplished in the past year, and contains a financial report. This program urgently needs your continued support.

WOULD YOU PLEASE, THEREFORE, RETURN YOUR MEMBERSHIP IN THE ENCLOSED REPLY ENVELOPE PROMPTLY. WE HOPE YOU WILL BE ABLE TO INCREASE YOUR CONTRIBUTION THIS YEAR.

Many thanks for your continued support.

Sincerely,

Edward S. Cogen

Neighbors, Inc.

10th Annual Report — 1968

Our Tenth Year

Initially concerned primarily with neighborhood stabilization through integrated housing, we have discovered that the experience of living in an integrated neighborhood has replaced stabilization as a goal in itself by a total involvement in all those areas of mutual interest which make neighborhood stabilization inevitable. In the year when the Kerner Commission's report of racial polarization was the talk of the land, Neighbors, Inc. and its members were actively at work bucking that trend. We have become a community organization in the true sense. And as the organization of an integrated community we continued to show that people of different ethnic and economic backgrounds can live together as good neighbors and work jointly for common goals. By our activities — and our successes — we have developed techniques which are being applied elsewhere and the organization continues to receive inquiries from all over the country for information and guidance. In the past year requests have been received from individuals and groups in Atlanta, Richmond, St. Louis, Baltimore, Minneapolis, Seattle, Los Angeles, and other cities.

Community Development

This year has seen support from the membership, in the tangible form of dues, increase by about 80% over last year, while our membership of almost a thousand families represents about 10% of the households in the 250-block Neighbors area. These 250 blocks are known as a pleasant, tree-lined area and the meticulous, vigilant, and time-consuming activities of the Neighborhood Services Committee must be credited in large part for maintaining this atmosphere. As part of its concern for the neighborhood, the committee this year proposed to the Sanitation Division a plan which has been approved for temporary unbalanced parking to allow thorough street cleaning, to be tried on an experimental basis initially in one section of our area. The committee has been involved in dozens of zoning battles, condemnation proceedings, and actions to eliminate housing code violations in the area, most of which, fortunately, have been successful. The intense, and successful, activities of this committee have made Neighbors, Incorporated an organization to be reckoned with in these city matters.

Concern with transportation planning in the city and its impact on residential communities has continued to occupy our attention this year. NI has maintained its opposition to freeway construction because it would be at the expense of housing and neighborhood integrity. It has continued its active role in pressing for an adequate rapid rail transportation system through the activities of the Transportation Committee and its representative on the Emergency Committee on the Transportation Crisis.

The city's plan for building a new police station provided NI another opportunity to work on community development. Our testimony before the National Capital Planning Commission resulted in its recommending to the District Government NI's plan to include community facilities as a means of improving police-community relations.

Work for Good Schools

Our tenth year has seen Neighbors' involvement in problems of urban education intensified. The Passow Report on the school system in the District of Columbia was the subject of a thorough analysis by a special Study Group set up by our Education Committee and conducted jointly with the Area 2-B PTA Council. Its work resulted in a lengthy report to the Board of Education which contained 93 recommendations for improvement of education in the District schools. Top priority was given to a recommendation for the establishment of Staff Development Centers. In its report to the Board of Education, the Study Group stated, "Quality education cannot solve all the problems of a sick society, but like it or not, the school carries the major burden of preparing each generation for the responsibilities of citizenship. We want children who will stay in school, not drop out, who will acquire greater skills, and broader learning, and become productive members of our society. Our biggest investment and commitment, therefore, has to be made in the schools."

Our efforts were indeed encouraged greatly by the action of the U.S. Office of Education in approving $100,000 (the full amount requested) for the establishment of an Institute for Educational Development in our area. This plan, largely prepared by Neighbors, is an extension of the "University of Maryland" plan previously developed by NI and funded on a limited scale by the University and the D.C. Board of Education. The U of M plan was in operation in the 1967-68 school year and 43 student teachers received training in NI area schools. The Institute, established under the Office of Education grant, will begin its operations in the fall of 1968. The Institute is designed to serve as the mechanism for a continuing study of the NI area schools and their needs and as a means of introducing innovations in teaching techniques into the schools.

Concern over the poor design of the new Takoma Elementary School led us into a city-wide effort to change the outmoded and inflexible design and site selection procedures of the Board of Education and the District Government. As the result of NI's lead in forming a city-wide Ad-Hoc Coalition on School Design and Site Selection, the Board of Education has adopted a procedure for community participation, and the City Council has agreed to consider changes in the District Government's procedures relating to building schools.

Youth Activities

In the field of youth activities, Junior Neighbors, a group of area teenagers sponsored by NI, had one of their most active years. Their program included a charity drive for toys and clothing at Christmas time, a clean-up campaign around Coolidge High, work in the emergency centers during the April civil disorders, and a petition drive urging the appointment of Dr. William Rountree as Coolidge's new Principal. The group also set up their own central job agency and arranged exchange visits with an organization of students in East Northport, Long Island, New York. Junior Neighbors' challenge to NI resulted in the now-historic athletic contests in basketball and softball. Late in the 1967-68 membership year NI agreed to become the sponsor of the Woody Bartges Boys Club, a teenage group also active in our area. The Club is the 6th Precinct Police Boys Club.

Other Programs

Although in this report we have highlighted certain activities and accomplishments of our tenth year, the work of all of NI's standing committees serves as the basis for the organization's service to the community. The Real Estate Committee, through its Housing Seminars, the still-active Housing Information Service, and its assistance to suburban groups, continues to fight for fair housing in the District and its suburbs. The Recreation Committee has continued its concern with the health and well-being of our neighborhood youth, The Membership, Finance, and Publicity Committees serve obviously vital functions, as have the special committees which have organized the successful House and Garden Tour and the Art and Book Festival. The latter event in particular has become an institution of ever-increasing popularity in this city and continues to grow in scope and attendance. This year's Winter Dance, a first experiment in this type of activity, was thoroughly enjoyed by an overflow crowd. Finally, the Legislative Committee helped to prepare testimony for NI's presentation to House and Senate Committees, the City Council, and to special bodies such as the National Commission on Urban Problems (the "Douglas Commission").

Beginning Our Eleventh Year

In this year of urban turmoil, in which we have suffered the loss, by assassination, of two great leaders, the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and Senator Robert F. Kennedy, when our city has tasted the violence which erupted from long-smouldering injustice and has seen the Poor Peoples' Campaign come and go with few tangible results to show, we have, both as an organization and as individuals, come to see very clearly that our commitment is not only to the development of our own area, but must inevitably be to the progress of the entire city. We solve our own problems best by solving those problems common to us all.

NEIGHBORS, INC. is a non-profit civic and educational organization working to maintain and improve our community – the neighborhoods of Brightwood, Manor Park, Shepherd Park and Takoma (D.C.). Over the past ten years the organization has recorded substantial achievements on behalf of our community. Although originally supported by foundation grants, Neighbors, Inc. is now entirely self-supporting from membership dues and fund raising events. Memberships and contributions are tax deductible.

NEIGHBORS, INC. works to promote an integrated community, based on the belief that persons of different ethnic and economic backgrounds can live together as good neighbors and work jointly for common goals. We invite you to join and work with us for an "intown, interesting, integrated community."

VOTE NOV. 26

SCHOOL BOARD RUN-OFF ELECTION

DR. JOHN A. SESSIONS

Dr. Sessions, an at-large candidate, has been a member of the Board of Education for two years. By profession an education specialist for the AFL-CIO, he is widely recognized as a champion of innovative and liberal school policies. A strong supporter of the Skelly Wright decision, has helped move the school system in the direction of team teaching, non-graded classes, relevant curriculum, educational parks, decentralized and community controlled schools within a framework of District-wide standards and attention to the rights of teachers, individualized instruction.

MRS. ANITA FORD ALLEN

Mrs. Allen, an at-large candidate, has been Vice President of the Board of Education for over a year; was chairman of the Board's Executive Study Group on the Passow Report. By profession a specialist in the U.S. Office of Education working to improve education for disadvantaged children. Supports intensive program of individualized instruction, keeping buildings open early and late for educational and community purposes, professional treatment for teachers, updating vocational programs to current technology, administrative decentralization and community control; supports the Skelly Wright decision

TWO at-large members to the Board of Education will be elected in this run-off. Therefore you will have TWO votes which Neighbors, Inc. urges you to cast for SESSIONS and ALLEN. The polls will be open from 8 AM to 8 PM and, for government employees, the same time-off regulations will apply as did for the Nov. 5 Presidential and school board election. For further information about voting call the Board of Elections, 347-5548. VOTE - TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 !

Tickets will be by advance sale only, for information call 726-1419 or 726-1226. The proceeds will be used to buy supplemental books for Coolidge's English classes and library.

MEMBERSHIP OPEN TO ALL IN AREA

Junior Neighbors President Ted Hagans wishes to announce that membership in the group is open to all high school age students in the area. He said that while the majority of their membership attends Coolidge they will welcome NI-area youth who attend other schools. For further information, call the numbers above.

JOB AGENCY REMINDER - the phone number for this helpful service run by Jr. Neighbors is 726-6475 (after school hours). Babysitting, household chores, etc.

MEMBERSHIP DRIVE OPENS

The 1968-69 Neighbors, Inc. membership drive is now underway. All NI members will soon receive a dues notice in the mail and are urged to respond promptly and generously.

Mrs. Barbara Cuban, chairman of the Membership and Hospitality Committee, has organized a major effort at gaining new members for NI. She has rallied nearly a hundred canvassers who are now in the area knocking on doors.

WARD 4 RUN-OFF ELECTION ALSO NOV. 26

The run-off election in the 4th Ward will be held Tuesday, Nov. 26 between Mrs. Muriel M. Alexander, who has been endorsed by Neighbors, Inc., and George W. Mitchell. As was pointed out in the last newsletter, Mrs. Alexander should not be confused with at-large candidate Benjamin Alexander who is not supported by NI.

A STORY FOR THE SEASON

Susan has spent nearly five of her 7 years in Junior Village, the D.C. home for children whose families can no longer care for them. She has two brothers, Robert and John, and two sisters, Sandy and Sherril, who have also spent more than four years at Junior Village.

These five have a vivid recollection of their parents. Between looking for jobs and working at the ones she found, the mother was seldom home. In spite of the little care she gave her children, the mother appears to them saintly in contrast to the angry brutality of their father who never worked.

Susan and her brothers and sisters first went to Junior Village one January in an emergency when the family had been evicted. They were there for only three months when the family was reunited. Although the father disappeared for three weeks, the mother vowed she would keep the family together and "things" would go better. But things never did go better, and subsequent "emergency" trips to Junior Village became longer and longer. The last one was for more than two and one-half years.

At Junior Village there was always good food, a place to sleep, and clothing. There were activities and trips, play equipment and lots of space to wander about. But John was always fighting and always lost; Robert withdrew, talked to no one, and didn't play. Susan cried most of the time and Sandy refused to wash or ever comb her hair. Sherrill played hooky from school at least twice a week. Each of the five became either silent and listless or defiant and destructive.

Then they were placed in a foster home. The new "parents" were two single women who bought a big house just in order to become parents to the Five. One of the parents quit working to be the mother at home, the other continued to be the breadwinner.

John still picked fights and Robert still would not talk. Susan cried all night every night and Sandy was still dirty. But Sherrill began to stay in school.

NI CANDIDATES ALL WIN
NEW SCHOOL BOARD TO TAKE OFFICE JANUARY 27

January 27, 1969 will mark a new era in Washington, when the first elected school board will take office.

All of the candidates supported by NI were successful in their bids for votes. They are At-Large Board Members Allen, Hobson, and Sessions. Mrs. Anita Allen, and Dr. John Sessions have served previously on the Board by appointment. Mr. Julius Hobson's interest and knowledge of D.C. School matters is well-known to all NI residents.

Mrs. Muriel Alexander of the NI area was successfully supported by NI, and will represent Ward 4. Mrs. Alexander has a lifetime of work in District Schools behind her so is familiar with all the problems she will face on the new Board.

Three ward members and two of the at-large members will serve for one year, and will be up for election in November 1969. The other six, 5 ward and 1 at-large, will serve three-year terms and be up for election in November 1971. Which members will serve one-year terms will be determined by drawing lots before January 27. Subsequent elections will be held every two years, terms being for 4 years. Members will be able to succeed themselves.

NEW FREEWAY PLAN A VICTORY

Joe Hairston testified on December 10th before the National Capitol Planning Commission and the D.C. City Council at their freeway hearing at Kelly-Miller Jr. High.

Shortly thereafter the NCPC and the Council voted adoption of a new, abbreviated freeway plan, eliminating the two most controversial elements, the North Central Freeway and the Three Sisters Bridge.

Mr. Hairston emphasized that more freeways involve us in a continuing spiral of more-cars-need-more-highways-draw-more-cars etc. And a car-bound commuter will be a hard man to persuade to ride rapid rail transit. Hairston added that no citizens organization in the District favors the freeway plan. He said further that if the City Council represents the citizens in any way, it therefore must respond to the residents' unified position against freeways. Hairston took notice of the feeling that the present council is willing and eager to listen to the citizens. (continued on page 4)

INSTITUTE FOR EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

A long-time in planning, and little-known by most NI residents, the Institute for Educational Development is a major cooperative educational landmark, and is now a going concern within our NI schools. The District of Columbia Public Schools, the University of Maryland, and this community cooperated to develop the Institute which is now funded under Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Act of 1965 through the US Office of Education. Its main thrust will be toward staff and curriculum development in Coolidge, Paul, Rabaut, Brightwood, Takoma,Whittier and Shepherd Schools.

The Teacher Education Center started in September, 1967, emphasizing pre-service and in-service programs for teachers. Not only school personnel, but parents, and other community people will become involved in the program. The elementary Center has 22 student teachers and 31 student observers. Five of last year's student teachers are now regular teachers in the Center Schools. The Secondary Center has also 22 student teachers and 23 student observers. One former student teacher is now at Coolidge.

The in-service program is more than merely student-teaching. Workshops in individualized instruction as well as in team teaching will be conducted. Analysis of teacher behavior, and teaching styles will be provided.

The Institute is administered by a director, Mr. Latinee Gullattee, and two Center coordinators. An advisory board is made up of principals, teacher and parent representatives, and representatives from the University of Maryland, the DC Public Schools, and Neighbor's, Inc.

Three subcommittees are now working on the development of proposals in the areas of Curriculum and Instruction, Staff Development and Publicity. Request for refunding for the 1969-70 school year will be made to USOE early in 1969.

ZONING SURVEILLANCE CONTINUES

After long and tedious efforts on the part of Carol Rende and the Neighborhood Services Committee, the dangerous and unsightly building at 3rd and Rittenhouse was razed. The vacant lot there is a relief.

However, Mrs. Rende continues the fight on behalf of the area residents. On November 27th Mrs. Rende testified before the Zoning Commission in opposition to a change of zoning for the 3rd and Rittenhouse site. The owner of the land seeks to build an apartment house and sought the zoning change to double the density allowed by the present zoning. At press time for the INK, the Zoning Commission had not ruled on the case.

Also on the 27th, Mrs. Rende stated in testimony before the Zoning Commission, NI's opposition to changes in zoning at 215 Cedar street, N.W. Mrs. Rende warned the Commission against growing speculative activities in the areas close to planned rapid transit stops, such as the Cedar Street location. She urged the Commission to deny the present request unless and until the owner presents reasons for the zoning change.

COOPERATION MARKS STREET CLEANING PILOT PROJECT

The street cleaning program planned for a selected area of Manor Park began in November with good cooperation from residents, it is reported. The 15-square block section, bounded by Sheridan, 5th, Oglethorpe and Blair Road, NW, has sprouted special signs instructing auto parkers when not to park. Mrs. Carol Rende's Neighborhood Services Committee worked out the plan with the DC Sanitation Department.

NI JOINS TAX REFORM GROUP

The Committee for Tax Reform in the District of Columbia has advocated steps to broaden the tax base and raise more money. The NI Board has chosen to join this group. A report by tax consultant L.L. Ecker-Racz has been studied by the group and considered as a basic working document.

Both local revenue resources and the Federal payment are under consideration by the Tax Reform Committee. Immediate and long-run reforms have been suggested.

NI URGED GET-OUT-THE VOTE EFFORT

In advance of the November 26 school board run-off election, NI President, Ed Cogen wrote to District and US officials and newspapers urging each of them to do all in their power to get out the vote.

The Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, the Chairman of the DC Board of Elections, Mayor Washington and the three daily newspapers were addressed. The voter turn-out was less than overwhelming, in spite of these and other efforts. Mayor Washington replied to the NI letter describing his efforts and thanking NI for its concern.

NEW EDITOR FOR NEWSLETTER

Neighbors's Ink now has a new editor appointed by the Board at its November meeting. Everett Waldo of the Takoma area now fills the place vacated by Chip Wood in the summer. Mr. Waldo is a staff member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, served on the staff of the Kerner Commission last year, and previously was an education specialist in the HEW school desegregation program.

BOARD VACANCIES FILLED

Bill Denham has been appointed to serve as Social Services Committee Chairman, an important leadership position which has been vacant far too long.

Chris Mould will now serve as Publicity Committee Chairman, replacing Chip Wood who resigned, due to increasingly heavy duties with the Washington Urban League.

NEW VACANCIES have occurred with the resignation of Ray Thelwell as the Shepherd Neighborhood Representative, and of Greg Swanson, Board Secretary. A search for new people to fill these slots is now underway.

MEMBERSHIP DRIVE CONTINUES

Volunteer Canvassers have been prowling the neighborhoods signing up new members and renewing membership of old members. The Drive is under the direction of Mrs. Barbara Cuban, chairman of the Membership Committee. Mrs. Cuban reports a growing interest in Neighbors' as a result of the many doors which have been knocked on.

Continuing activities of Mrs. Cuban's Committee include open houses for new members like the one held at Willo and Larry White's in December, and a team of visitors who call upon new residents at their homes to welcome them.

Information on your new neighbors can be given to Mrs. Cuban by calling 882-0986.

NI SPEAKER ASSISTS SUBURBAN GROUP

Mrs. Martha Graham, former chairman of NI's Real Estate Committee spoke recently to a meeting of the Chillum-Ray Civic Association in Prince Georges County. In her talk she emphasized the early efforts of NI toward stabilization of the neighborhood. During the question period she made those experiences relevant to the suburban group's problems.

OUR NEIGHBORS IN THE NEWS

NORMAN YOUNG, Senior at Coolidge, was named to the first offensive, All-Metropolitan High School All Star Football Team, as well as to the Interhigh West All Star Offensive Team.

ERNEST WEBSTER, another of our Coolidge Seniors, and also on the Interhigh West All-Star Offensive Team, was named to the second, All-Metropolitan High School All-Star Football Team.

THURMAN HARMON, also at Coolidge, was named to the Defense of the Interhigh West All-Star Team.

WANDA PHILIBERT was recently featured in the Washington Post with her two Viet Nam War Orphans.

MRS. BARRINGTON D. PARKER has been named alternate National Committeewoman for the DC Republican Committee.

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICIALS INVITED TO NI AREA

On behalf of NI and our Real Estate Committee, Mrs. Esther Peterson is giving her time and gracious manner in order to write to newly elected Senators and Congressmen, telling them about the advantages of living in our area, and inviting them to do so when they move to Washington. Senator Charles Goodell (R-NY) and Representatives Brock Adams (D-Wash) and Donald M. Fraser (D-Minn) have sent letters to the newly elected members of each house urging them to live in the District.

THE WEEK'S COLDEST WEATHER REPORT

"The last few days have been very cold, registering 8-12 degrees below zero. They have been beautiful to look at from the inside but slightly trying to be out in. The Pine Grosbeaks don't seem to mind and are eating the frozen apples on the trees."

(From the Hardwick, Vermont Gazette. What hot or cold reporting styles appear in your hometown newspaper? Would you send them in to us, please.)

BRIGHTWOOD ELECTS NOMINATING COMMITTEE -

at the annual meeting November 18th held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. George W. Snowden. Featured speaker was school board candidate Mrs. Muriel Alexander. Elected to serve one year terms on the Nominating Committee were Mrs. Luveta Gresham,(RA 6-7878); Miss Idella Murray (723-3190) and Dr. George Snowden (TA 9-8651).

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Neighbors, Inc. is a respected community organization with recognized influence in city affairs. Neibhbors provides a means for residents to deal effectively with the complexities of our local government.

At the same time, residents who identify with the organization also come to identify with each other. The organization therefore serves important personal needs as well as community action.

"A Story for the Season", appearing on page one, illustrates something about being neighbors at the personal level. The Freeway and School Board Election stories demonstrate effectiveness on the community.

Your editor believes in the practical necessity of both levels. We intend that the Neighbors' Ink will serve both levels.

I have already called upon each Neighborhood Representative to find reporters in his area. Those reporters, and the Reps, and many others, will be called upon to help make this newsletter an effective instrument to serve the needs of Neighbors' neighbors.

Hairston also raised the question of when do cars go, when they get to the end of the freeway. Another question was t hat of additional parking areas needed, and the loss of valuable downtown land to parking space.

Since the NCPC and Council adoption of the new plan, there has been considerable negative rumbling from some suburban interests. However, it is worth pointing out that every suburban county and municipality passed bond issue referendums to finance the rapid rail transit program with plenty of margin.

Mr. Hairston said later, that there is still a long way to go, but that he had some hope that Congress would listen to the will of District residents regarding the freeways, and listen to suburban residents regarding rapid transit, and act responsibly for the best interests of both groups.

The first Christmas the family was together, the parents wondered how a family-style Christman would turn out. There was no way to know. Nothing was sure, everything was chaos. At Christmastime the Five talked more about their real parents than they had earlier. They said mostly that they hoped their real mother and father would not find them and take them away.

In the year and a half since they have been in their new home, some changes have be gun. John's fighting has been turned toward team sports; Robert's shell is broken, but the emerging Robert is badly damaged. Susan's crying stopped long before the rocking chair began to wear out, and Sandy has discovered she is pretty. She and Sherill are young ladies now.

Their new parents attribute many of the changes to the care and concern shown by their neighbors. Neighborhood fathers have been important men in the lives of John and Robert. School friends and their families have helped each of the Five in different ways. Scout leaders, recreation directors, and church people have given care and support. But most of all a sensitive school principal and a concerned faculty have given invaluable guidance both to the children and their "parents".

Christman 1968 is one full of certainty for the Five. Last years' decorations are signs to them of security. Wheras Christmas was never sure and always chaotic, this year there is a common expectation that Christmas will indeed come.

There is still a lot of noise in the new big house. But it has changed: there is more laughter and fewer tears. When there is silence it is not the dreadful silence of fear, but the silence of knowing who they are and where they are going to be tomorrow.

In its important points, this is a true story; only the names and other details in the story above have been chaned to conceal identity. And the Five with their foster parents, live in the Neighbors' Inc., Area. They are our neighbors; and they say their success to date is largely because we have been their neighbors.

KNIGHTS CITY CHAMPS
(addition to story on p.5)

The story on P. 5 about the Neighbors Knights football team inadvertantly neglects to mention the Knights' undefeated season won them the city-wide championship in the Roving Leaders Unlimited Tackle Football League, sponsored by the D.C. Recreation Department.

NEIGHBORS KNIGHTS CITY CHAMPS

The Neighbors Knights football team, sponsored by NI and the Woody Bartges Boys Club, turned out an impressive undefeated season. Only one team scored against them, and two teams forfeited the game because the Knights were too good and too big.

Games and scores -

Build Black, Inc. Panthers	23-0
Layton Falcons	60-0 and 36-0
Northeast Hawks	36-0
Edgewood Giants	forfeit
Watts All Stars	19-0
Northeast Rams	7-6
4-H Nitros	forfeit

The game against the NE Rams was the close one; with only 9 seconds left the Rams tried for a field goal but failed.

After each game the Knights gave a trophy to the outstanding player on the other team as well as to their own outstanding player. On one occasion at least, the Knights provided the opposition with helmets when they showed up with too few. It is not known whether this was an act of charity or whether the Knights were calling the bluff of their challengers.

The Knights are made up of young men from 17-23 years old. NI bought jerseys for the team as a part of the support. The games at home were played at the Fort Stevens Playground, the use of which also was arranged by NI.

Turk Gilmore has been the spark behind the team, and deserves great credit for the spirit and record made by the Knights. Neighbors congratulates Turk and the Team!

NEIGHBORS SUPPORTS REC CENTERS

Support for our several recreation centers has been provided by NI by $10. contributions each to the Takoma, Fort Stevens and Emory Recreation Centers.

TAKOMA REC CENTER ANNOUNCES ACTIVITIES

A major seasonal activity at the Takoma Rec Center will be a carolling party on Monday, December 23rd. Carollers should meet at the Center at 5:30 p.m. and return after singing for refreshments and good times. Every age singer is welcome, but if you're under 10, please bring a parent or older brother or sister.

Post Christmas Basketball Tourney is being held at Rabaut Jr. HS. Your team can play. Three age-classes: 12 and under, age 13-15, and age 16-18. Sign up with Charles Butler at the Takoma Rec Center as soon as possible. Phone RA 3-8222.

Ballet Classes for all ages of girls will begin again January 4th for 10 weeks. Register any time at the Takoma Rec Center, phone RA 3-8222.(small fee)

HOME TEAM WINS FIRST ANNUAL CHITTERLING BOWL

The Neighbors' Knights defeated the Black Panthers from Build Black, Inc., 32-0 at the First Annual Chitterling Bowl game played on Thanksgiving Day at the Coolidge Stadium. Neighbors Knights are supported by NI and NI efforts made possible the use of the Coolidge Stadium. Despite the rain, an enthusiastic crowd witnessed a spirited game by a great team. Congrats, Knights!

NEW NEW NUMBER-JUNIOR NEIGHBORS JOB AGENCY

Miss Sylvia McRoy is the new coordinator for the Junior Neighbors Job Agency. Her home number is 526-7372. Miss McRoy is also Treasurer of Jr. NI, but she emphasizes that the two positions are not related.

All NI residents are encouraged to seek part-time general help from Jr. NI Job Agency. Baby-sitters, window washers, yard cleaners, etc. Clients may arrange terms and time with workers.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY DANCE SCHEDULED FOR WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

By special arrangements and thoughtful planning, Jim Peyton's committee has scheduled the Washington's Birthday Cabaret-Dance for Saturday, February 22, 1969. Music by Bob Craig's Jazz Artists will make the event one not to be missed. Ticket information will be published in January, but set aside the date now, to be present at the Ohev Sholom Synagogue, 16th and Jonquil Sts. N.W.

HIKING FOR AFRICA!

Operation Crossroads Africa will sponsor its fund-raising hike through Rock Creek Park in April. A full-time director will coordinate plans by schools and youth to participate. Preparations will include lectures by Africans residing in Washington and by returned volunteers. Your willingness to help and/or participate can be registered by calling 362-9020.

NI AVAILABLE IN ART FORM

Attention should be given the drawing on the cover of the 10th Annual Report. Done by one of our Neighbors, JOANNA VOGELSANG, the drawing is available in posters 18" x 30" for only $2.50 at the NI office.

APPLY NOW FOR FEDERAL CITY COLLEGE

Applications are now available for enrollment in the Freshman Class for next year at Federal City College. First-come, first-admitted basis will determine the membership of the class, and 3500 forms have been sent out already beside those available to high school seniors.

Information and forms are available at the admissions office, 425 2nd St. N.W., or phone 628-8640.

TENTH ANNUAL REPORT CONCLUDES FIRST DECADE FOR NI

At the end of ten years, NI's effectiveness is reaching to many cities where groups are seeking to emulate NI's work. The Annual Report mentions the many ways which our community organization serves both its own neighborhoods as well as the whole city and even other cities. The philosophy under which NI operates is implicit in the description of the activities, and the activities give reason for pride.

But perhaps most important, as the Report cites the many activities and the continuing influence of Neighbors' Inc., the Report stands as a testimony of hope, over against the tragic year in which the Report is made. To the Founders of NI especially, but to all its members, congratulations are due as the second decade begins. (Free additional copies of the Report are available at the NI office.)

COMMUNITY NEWS SERVICE

Neighbors' INK is essentially a community newsletter, by the community and for the community. Many organizations sponsor activities which are open to the public and of general interest. Churches, PTA's Recreation Centers, Student groups and others are requested to submit their plans of activities to the editor for inclusion in INK. We look forward to expanding our community news service. Editorial discretion will be used wherever necessary. Mail information to the Editor at the Neighbors' Office, or use the phone.

COPY DEADLINE will be Friday following the monthly Board meeting which is the second Wednesday. For the January issue the deadline date will be January 10th.

Mailing is scheduled for one week later, so items for the January issue should be for dates later than January 17th.

THE COMMITTEE OF RESPONSIBILITY, an organization working to save war-burned and war-injured Vietnamese children.

Motivated by a sense of humanity and justice and a concern for the welfare of the burned and injured Vietnamese children, THE COMMITTEE OF RESPONSIBILITY was formed by a group of physicians, clergymen, and concerned laymen. A non-profit, non-political organization, it is dedicated to the task of evacuating these children to the United States in order to heal their wounds, restore function to their injured limbs, and to relieve their suffering through the intensive, long-term treatments and surgical procedures that these injuries require, and which are impossible to obtain in Vietnam. Relief has been granted to fifty of these children. With sufficient public support, many more could be helped.

THE COMMITTEE OF RESPONSIBILITY has recently opened their Philadelphia chapter office in the Germantown Community Presbyterian Church, Greene and Tulpehocken Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. 19144.

We cordially invite you to attend this Open House in order to acquaint you with the people, policies and plans of this organization which has settled in your neighborhood.

WEST MT. AIRY NEWSLETTER

7139 Cresheim Road, Phila. Pa. 19119 Vol. 11 No. 1 Feb. 1969

Editor: Gaby Bogoslaw

NEW APPROACH IN PUBLIC HOUSING

The Philadelphia Housing Authority has begun a new scatter-site policy, which is designed to prevent all public housing from being in one section of the city.

The Emlen Arms, 6733 Emlen Street, in West Mt. Airy, which had housed the now defunct modeling school, has been chosen as a site for housing for the elderly. Overwhelming neighborhood reaction was one of acceptance of the proposal.

Ruth Steele testified at the public hearing to the effect that:

1. WMAN approved thoroughly
2. We welcomed the opportunity to grow as a community
3. We suggested a citizens' committee be formed to work with the developer and the Authority.
4. Traffic and parking problems be thoroughly investigated for improved conditions.

The idea of a committee (composed of 4 local neighbors of the Emlen Arms and 4 WMAN board members) was welcomed by the developer and a meeting has already been arranged. The Department of Streets is already making a traffic study of the block in question.

MAGIC SHOW PROVES TO BE MAGIC

The WMAN Magic Show, held at Summit Church in December was a rip roaring success. The auditorium was jammed, the magician excellent and the treasury enriched.

There will be a concerted effort to set up more events and activities for kids and families so that neighbors can really get to know each other better.

HELP WANTED

A woman to do research into requirements for setting up day care centers. Anyone interested call Ruth Steele, WMAN office, CH 2-1196.

FACE TO FACE EVALUATION UNDERWAY

A committee has been set up to evaluate the recent Face to Face series. It is hoping to find answers to such questions as:

1. Where do we go from here
2. What can WMAN do as a neighborhood organization.

Anyone who attended all six sessions is invited to send in his own evaluation to the office.

Watch for news of this evaluation and future follow-up.

NOMINATING COMMITTEE NEEDS IDEAS

In response to great need for WMAN to become more representative of our whole community, President Jerry Balka this year appointed a nominating committee of 5 Board members and 5 members at large. In addition, he and Committee Chairman Leslie Pernsley are asking all members to submit names to the office within the next week.

Board members meet on the second Monday of each month and are asked to bring to the meetings fresh ideas and approaches, and a sense of community priority. Any WMANer who feels he or she would like to be considered for the board is invited to contact the office. In addition, names of friends and neighbors members feel would be working board members are also requested.

Remember - a community organization is only the working tool of community people. Get involved and help West Mt. Airy Neighbors continue to grow as it attempts to continue its objective of making our community a fine place to live.

CHRISTMAS - HANNUKAH SING DRAWS CROWD

Over 150 East and West Mt. Airy neighbors got together at the Lutheran Home to join in a holiday sing, jointly sponsored by EMAN and WMAN.

It was agreed by both organizations that more activities of this type are needed and will be forthcoming.

GET SETTERS CONTINUE FIGHT FOR LIFE

Get Set Sunday in West Mt. Airy netted over $600, a drop in the bucket in terms of need, but considered a good response because of the bad weather.

The next step in the drive to keep GET SET alive is a massive letter writing campaign to make Washington big shots aware of what is going on in Philadelphia and how the public feels about the program.

If you have written your letter get, now is the time!

RUTH STEELE AT HUDSON, N.Y. CONFERENCE

WMAN Executive Director Ruth Steele, was guest speaker at an all day conference sponsored by the YWCA and the Health and Welfare Council of this upstate New York town. In addition to her talk, she acted as one of the discussion leaders - her group discussing human resources in community life. The major concern of the community was its lack of a grass roots citizens organization. Mrs. Steele's talk was aimed at telling the West Mt. Airy story.

NE FAIR HOUSING COUNCIL GETS SUPPORT

WMAN has been supporting the Northeast Fair Housing Council in its aim to have full open housing in that section of the city.

BOOTH BACK, PHONE PHINE

Bell Telephone Co. has replaced a phone booth and its equipment after one was stolen from Carpenter Lane station. (yes, booth and all!)

EMERGENCY PRESCRIPTIONS AVAILABLE

It is possible to obtain emergency prescriptions. This is how you do it:

1. Call the 14th Police Dist.
   MU 6-3140
   MU 6-3141

   or the 35th Police Dist.
   MU 6-3350
   MU 6-3351
2. Police will call pharmacist from confidential list they hold.
3. Verification will be made by the pharmacist by calling the patient and his physician.
4. Police will meet pharmacist at his store and stay until the patient or physician gets prescription and store is closed.

CITY HELPS SOLVE LOCAL PROBLEMS

NO TRUCK PARKING FROM 6 PM to 6 AM has been approved for 7000 block of Mower.

Several abandoned cars were towed away.

A four-way STOP sign will soon be installed at Cresheim and Carpenter(after three years pressure)

An alley light will soon be installed behind houses south of Durham Street on Cresheim Road.

Police Sanitation is working with residents to clean up properties on Emlen below Carpenter.

L & I was asked to investigate a vacant property in the 100 lbock of W. Hortter.

LOCAL MARKET RATES THANK YOU

Congratulations to Glen Food Market on switching from glass soda dispenser machines to one that dispenses cans. The change was made at the request of WMAN members concerned about safety of youngsters using the machine.

COMMUNITY SELF HELP CENTER PLANS AFFAIRS

Two events are coming up which need local support. The Community Self Help Center at 29 W. Good Street is staging them to help them in carrying out programs for the community.

The 1st is a bake sale to be held on Feb. 1 and 2, from Noon to 8 PM and the 2nd will be a chicken dinner sale set for March 1st, also from Non to 8 P.M.

BOARD MEETINGS OPEN TO ALL

Once again the policy of your association is stated so that any and all members can know that they are most welcome to come to their Board of Directors meetings.

These meetings are held on the second Monday of each month. Members are invited to come, speak out on all issues under discussion, bring up concerns new to the association and generally take an active part in WMAN.

If you are interested in attending one or more meetings, simply call Ruth Steele at the office, CH 2- 1196 and asked to be added to the mailing list for these meetings. Since at the present time, Board meetings are held in the homes of Board members, it is necessary to know if you wish to attend.

TICKETS ON SALE FOR "WAKE UP MAN & LIVE"

"Wake Up, Man and Live" will be presented Feb. 28th at Chestnut Hill College Auditorium at 8:15 P.M.

This contemporary musical, written by George Nider and Edward Metz, has a cast of 30 young, black students chosen from over 1000 auditions last summer.

It's all about life on Diamond Streets and deals with family, people and some contemporary problems.

Proceeds of this performance, sponsored by the North Philadelphia - Chestnut Hill Pipeline,will go entirely toward scholarships and further professional training for the cast.

E D I T O R I A L

West Mt. Airy residents are again reminded of the laws regarding dogs reaming at large.

In addition to making a mess of lawns in the area, they can also frighten people, especially children. Recently the WMAN office received a distress call from Mrs. Beatrice Chernock, principal of the Henry School; two large dogs were racing the halls, terrorizing children.

You are asked to keep your dog on a leash and be with him when he goes outside. Also, if you know of a neighbor whose dog is allowed to raom, tell him of the law.

To have a pet is your own privilege but it is also the privilege of your neighbors not to have your dog on their property, or becoming a nuisance where their children are concerned.

G.B.

Ticket Prices are: Students - $1.50 and Adults - $2.50.

Tickets can be purchased through the WMAN office. Checks must be made out to: MRS. PHILIP GEISLER, Treasurer, 30 Windsor Road, Erdenheim Road.

Send for your tickets directly to Mrs. Geisler or through WMAN. Either way, be sure to make the checks to Mrs. Geisler and include your name and address.

GROUP RELATIONS CONFERENCES

INTRODUCTION

Since 1965 the Washington School of Psychiatry has sponsored a series of residential conferences for the purpose of furthering the study of human behavior in groups. Each year a two-week conference is held in June and a one-week conference in August. Three of the five conferences held in the years 1965-67 were co-sponsored by the Yale University Department of Psychiatry; two were sponsored by the Washington School of Psychiatry alone.

The two-week conferences will continue to be held, as they have been in the past, in June at Mount Holyoke College. They will be sponsored by the Washington School of Psychiatry and managed by a Board which includes the following members:

The Hon. Abe Fortas, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Chairman
Marshall Edelson, M. D., Ph. D., Senior Staff Psychiatrist, Austen Riggs Center, Inc.
William Hausman, M. D., Associate Professor, Johns Hopkins University Medical School
Frederick C. Redlich, M. D., Dean, Yale University School of Medicine
A. Kenneth Rice, M. A., Sc. D., Chairman, Centre for Applied Social Research, Tavistock Institute of London
Margaret J. Rioch, Ph. D., Member of Executive Council, Washington School of Psychiatry
R. Adm. Blinn Van Mater, USN (Ret.), Secretary

The one-week Conferences will continue to be held in late August. The location in 1968 will be at Amherst College. They will be sponsored by the Washington School of Psychiatry and managed by the Washington School of Psychiatry Conference Committee, which consists of:

Margaret J. Rioch, Ph. D., Member of the Washington School of Psychiatry Executive Council, Chairman
Arden A. Flint, Jr., M. D., Assistant Chief, Psychiatry Service, U. S. Public Health Service — Outpatient Clinic
Roger L. Shapiro, M. D., Chief, Section on Personality Development, Adult Psychiatry Branch, National Institute of Mental Health
R. Adm. Blinn Van Mater, USN (Ret.), Executive Officer, Washington School of Psychiatry

These conferences are derived from those developed by the Centre for Applied Social Research, The Tavistock Institute of Human Relations of London. They are characterized by a particular emphasis in subject matter, a particular style and a particular philosophy.

SUBJECT MATTER

The primary task of the conferences is the study of the group as a whole. The method and approach of the conferences are designed to illuminate the processes and dynamics of units larger than the individual and the pair. The units under study are the total conference group of fifty to sixty members and the small face to face group. Intergroup phenomena are also studied. The conferences do not overlook the individual but try to see how he is a part of the dynamic field. They also try to make clear the responsibility of each individual for the operation and quality of the unit to which he belongs and for his own action, reaction, attitude and response.

The conferences stress the covert aspects of group activity so that members may become increasingly aware of the complex and often irrational factors which influence the behavior of groups. The conferences provide opportunities to observe how the emotional and irrational elements of group life further or hinder task performance.

Special stress is laid upon the study of leadership function. The wish for leadership which emerges in different forms in different kinds and phases of group life is scrutinized and, whenever possible, explicated.

The study of phenomena occasioned by boundaries and differences in function between groups is another area of special interest. The boundary between one group and another is that place above all others where leadership must be exercised. The conferences try to make clear that a meaningful boundary need not become a barrier, but is essentially a membrane across which transactions take place much as the skin mediates transactions between the outside world and the internal organs of the body.

STYLE

The style of the conferences is disciplined and austere. The message which this style is intended to convey is the seriousness of the undertaking, the single-mindedness with which the staff is prepared to devote itself to the task which it has set itself, the recognition of the difficulties inherent in its task, and its intention not to look aside from any conflicts which occur.

PHILOSOPHY

The philosophy of the conferences can at best be adumbrated since it is not dogma to which adherence is required, but is more like a statement of hypotheses. The ideal of staff performance, which is, of course, never fully realized, is the combination and resolution of two apparently opposite values, dedication and questioning. The staff tries to make a clear statement about its own purpose and position and to adhere to this purpose and position no matter how difficult it may become. At the same time the staff invites and encourages questioning of its task, its purpose and its position, on the part of the members, and is constantly engaged in self-questioning of its own activities. A major value to which the leadership is committed is ruthless honesty in thinking about oneself and one's group without any assumption that such honesty will necessarily lead to smooth resolution of conflict. Thought, intellect, and rationality are highly valued, as are clear and firm decisions made in the service of a stated goal.

There is recognition on the part of the leadership of the conferences that human beings readily, all too readily, form groups, that they form mobs which lynch, groups which glorify fanatical leaders, groups which easily slip into orgiastic experiences or into the warm glow of togetherness. On the other hand, the formation of a human group seriously and consistently dedicated to a serious task, without fanaticism or illusion, is an extremely difficult process and a relatively rare occurrence. Human beings have the potentiality for this kind of group formation, and when it occurs, even briefly and imperfectly, it is one of the most valuable human phenomena, as well as one of the most individually satisfying experiences, which exist. Without some element of this, groups, both large and small, tend to remain childishly dependent upon a leader or a set of slogans, to seek an enemy against whom to unite, or to disintegrate in one way or another. One of the major aims of the conferences is to contribute to people's ability to form serious work groups committed to the performance of clearly defined tasks. Whether or not members of such groups feel friendliness, warmth, closeness, competitiveness, or hostility to each other is of secondary importance. It is assumed that these and other feelings will occur from time to time, but this is not the issue. The issue is the common goal to which each individual makes his own differentiated contribution.

METHODS

The conferences have been set up as residential events in order to create a situation in which people can concentrate their full energies and attention on the undertaking. In ordinary life the exigencies of daily work are usually so pressing that it is difficult to free time and energy for sufficient involvement in the learning experience. In a residential conference there is no need to interrupt the learning process by fulfilling the usual demands of job, family and social life.

There are four exercises which constitute the main work of the conferences. In each of these the staff members, who function as consultants, call attention to the processes as they see them which are occurring in the group there and then. The individual's private life and personal history are never the subject of study. The usual session for all exercises lasts one and one half hour. The number of sessions varies with the exercise and the duration of the conference. In addition to the exercises, the conference as a whole is the subject for discussion in one or two plenary sessions toward the end and is the main object of concern to the conference leadership throughout the one or two weeks of its duration. Concepts about groups and organizations which have proved useful to the staff are introduced through a few lectures or in Application Groups. The four major exercises are:

1. Small Groups. These consist of from eight to twelve members drawn in so far as possible from diverse occupational backgrounds. The task of each group is to study its own behavior in the "here and now." Every member has an opportunity to observe both his own behavior and that of others. He is also able to try out different ways of establishing relationships.

2. The Large Group. This consists of all the conference members together with two or more consultants. The task of this exercise is to study behavior in meetings that consist of more people than can form a face-to-face group. Members have the opportunity to experience, and to learn to deal with situations in which "sides" are taken spontaneously, existing sub-groups adhere and split, other factions are formed for apparently irrational reasons, and the individual can feel suddenly bereft of support.

3. The Intergroup Exercise. This provides opportunities for all members to study the relationships between and among groups as they happen. Members form groups among themselves for this purpose. Consultants are available for groups so formed and to any intergroup activities that occur.

4. Application Groups. These consist of from five to ten members drawn from those in similar or complementary roles in their ordinary work. The task of each group is to consider the relevance of conference experience to members' own work. Each group has a staff member to assist in its task.

CONFERENCE LEARNING

The conferences provide time and opportunity for members to participate in and to experiment in situations which, while specifically structured for the conferences, are similar in essence to those in which members find themselves in their own work. The conferences provide a microcosm in which people can experience and at the same time reflect upon the difficulties which human beings encounter when they work together over long periods in the macrocosm. They also provide a conceptual framework for thinking about the problems of group and organizational life.

The conferences are open-ended in the sense that there is no attempt to prescribe what anyone shall learn. People who have attended more than once describe coming away with different kinds of learning each time. What an individual member takes away from the conferences, or whether he takes anything at all, depends upon himself, his interests, his aptitudes, his ability to integrate new and difficult experiences usefully. The situation is one which is intended for mature people who have some degree of intellectual sophistication and enough emotional flexibility and stability to profit from an experience which requires living through considerable chaos and anxiety. The conferences are not suited for those who are in need of, or in search of, psychotherapy.

The members are free to experiment and to experience in a situation in which no "real" issues are at stake, such as loss of job, or success of a project. But the "unreal" issues of the conference group life become extraordinarily real, and it often seems that the events of many years are telescoped into a few days. At the same time, the members are urged, with all the skill and energy available to the staff, to think while they are experiencing and experimenting. This is, of course, difficult; but it is not different from what is required of a good leader, especially in times of crisis. The life of the conferences thus becomes highly relevant to "real" life in the world.

MEMBERSHIP

The membership of each conference is limited to 55 people. The members are drawn from various occupations. Preference is given to those holding positions of responsibility. People interested in community development and social action, representatives of the professions, of government, including the armed forces, and of business and industry, will find that the conferences deal with problems relevant to their work.

FEES

The conferences are of necessity self-supporting. Total fees, including tuition, board and room, are $600.00 for the two-week, and $350.00 for the one-week conference. Limited funds are available for scholarships.

STAFF

Staff members have been drawn from the Tavistock Institute and Clinic in London and from various American institutions. A minimum prerequisite is attendance at two conferences in the Tavistock tradition either in England or in the United States. The American institutions in the years 1965-67 included:

Dear Adm:

It was good to talk with you on the telephone. I do hope very much something can be worked out for Mr. Campbell and I to attend the conference at Mount Holyoke College June 7-20, 1969.

I feel very strongly that the interaction of individuals in groups are so entwined with the difficulties superimposed by race, poverty, cultures, etc. increases our problems.

I am quite certain that Mr. Campbell and I would not only gain much from the conference, but I believe our peculiar interests and divergent backgrounds could be stimulating to all of those attending.

With all of the best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Smith:

We are glad to know of your interest in attending our Group Relations Conferences, and also of your interest in bringing along a Black Planner Associate. Unfortunately, we have left only very limited scholarship funds, and can probably not offer more than $200 for anyone person. However, if you and your Associate would send in Application Blanks, we should be glad to give very serious consideration to your applications. You may remember that to be considered for a scholarship we need two references, a statement of what funds would be available to you from your own organization, and a statement of your purpose in attending the Conference. We probably have this for you from last time, but we would need this information on your Associate. It would expedite matters if you could see that this material is sent promptly. We shall be considering scholarship applications this coming week. I am enclosing an extra brochure and blank for your convenience.

With best personal regards,

Yours sincerely,

PLANNING AND PARTICIPATION

PLANNING AND PARTICIPATION

An Address to: American Institute of Planners

By
Mitchell Sviridoff, Vice President
The Ford Foundation

It comes as a rude shock to some and an ideological delight to others that the nation has been forced to a confrontation with a phenomenon dubbed, for want of a better term, "citizen participation." The last few years have made unmistakably clear that no planner, no public official, no labor leader and especially no university president, can function effectively without a participation strategy vis-a-vis his constituents.

This phenomenon is not limited to one race or generation or economic class. Nor does it relate solely to cities or to governmental operations. While college students press for reforms in the university system, their middle income parents reject critically needed bond issues. Large numbers of blue collar workers applaud George Wallace and repudiate settlements negotiated by their leadership. And black communities demand control over public services and reject their traditional spokesmen.

Indeed, all across the globe various segments of society appear to be rejecting established leadership. Daley of Chicago, De Gaulle of France, Diaz of Mexico. the Bishop of Washington, D.C., and Hayakawa of San Francisco State can clasp hands in a brotherhood of bewilderment and despair. They are beseiged by dissent. The idea seems to have gotten around that the meek will inherit the earth only when they rid themselves of their timidity.

In this country the response of leadership to these pressures for participation is reminiscent in many ways of the labor crisis of the Thirties. There is now on the right, as there was then, the same apoplectic rage about the inefficiency and the high cost of bargaining with the disinherited proletariat. And balancing this grumbling on the right, as there was then, is the thunder on the left, punctuated with demonstration and confrontation. But in the Thirties there came a time when the intensity of such ideological strife eased, because it became futile and counter-productive and eventually irrelevant. After a while it became clear that unions were here to stay, and the leadership on both sides settled down to make the necessary case-by-case accommodations.

If the analogy holds, and I think it does, the same arrangement must be made with those pressing for citizen participation in the Sixties. For these pressures stem from forces that have deep roots in our society. Like the unions these forces clearly are here to stay.

It is not hard to discern what these forces are and why we are having a crisis in participation.

This is a nation, after all, with a strong democratic tradition. This tradition moves in ebbs and flows between Jeffersonian and Hamiltonian tendencies, variously described as the conflict between "the people" and the "government," or between decentralized and centralized authority, or between freedom and efficiency, or between process and product. It appears that we are now in a Jeffersonian phase. In many quarters, participation by the people is more to be desired than expertise, efficiency in government, a higher rate of housing construction, or better planned cities.

Beyond this historical rationale, several specific factors peculiar to our time underlie today's thrust for participation. Some of these are basic characteristics of modern society and are international in scope. Others are manifest only in the United States and exacerbate the broader tendencies.

In the former category I would list the impact of technology, the ever increasing trend to urbanization, the growth of government and the advent of the welfare state, and the generally higher level of education in the developed nations.

All these factors, of course, are closely entwined. Technology has made possible the existence of huge organizations, material affluence, computers, and instant telecommunications. Urbanization has concentrated problems and stimulated the spectacular growth of government at the local level. Along with this the Federal Government in this country has begun to assume, in ever larger measure, its rightful responsibilities in welfare, housing, community development, transportation, education and medical care.

All of this means a bigness, a complexity, a remoteness which can overwhelm and alienate elements of a generation, which, while better educated than its predecessors, finds it increasingly difficult to cope with the changes that are accumulating with unprecedented speed. In attempting to do it, we are working without the clear and authoritative moral guidelines of an earlier era.

You will notice that I haven't mentioned Vietnam. I haven't mentioned the poverty program. And I haven't directly mentioned racial tensions. In many ways what I have said could have been stated in 1963 or 1964 or even earlier and applied to urban renewal or the highway program. We must be clear about this. Long before we had a major commitment in Southeast Asia, long before community action, and long before the disorders of the 60's, forces at work in the society were bringing participation to the fore as a major issue. Without Vietnam and the rising racial tension, the dialogue might have been different and the crisis less intense, but the issue of participation, and its negative counterpart, alienation, would still be shaking the foundations of our institutions.

But we are fighting an unpopular war, and we are faced with a black social revolution. University officials know all too well the devastating campus impact of the Vietnam issue. And social planners, confronted with a bulging list of compelling needs on the American agenda for the next decade, are particularly affected by the black revolution.

Yet many of us appear to be surprised by what has happened, caught unawares by the intensity of the black explosion. Were we lulled into a false sense of security by the significant but relatively placid battles to gain legal rights? Surely we should have recognized that, like other minorities before them, black people had to enter fully into the political and economic mainstream of the nation. This was bound to be disruptive. For if power is to shift to an out-group, it must be yielded by another group. Neither this nor any society could make such a transfer smoothly and serenely.

It was perhaps inevitable, therefore, that all of these pressures for full participation would encounter opposition or inertia; that action, when it came, would be too little and too late; and that this in turn would lead to the escalation of demand -- moving from a stance of rational bargaining to extremist and sometimes violent pressure for complete control and absolute separatism, or, at its most extreme, anarchy and nihilism.

This understandable if unfruitful rage is intensified by two related and unfortunate characteristics of the political process in the United States. We repeatedly oversell and underdeliver on public programs. Our political process seems to compel us to seek panaceas, to make limited programs into universal solutions. It is part of the business of getting bills enacted in the Congress. But its effect is alternately to raise and dash hopes, and to delude both ourselves and the groups we aim to serve.

The new administration seems aware of these dangers. But the pressures to oversell are built into the political process and already appear to be at work. "Black Capitalism" and private tax incentives are good but limited notions, yet they are well on the way to becoming the newest chapter in the long and frustrating story of illusory panaceas.

Yet there has been progress. Not enough to be sure. But incomes are up; unemployment is down; aid to education increases, and more blacks are moving into positions of authority. In virtually every area, while the pace is slower than we would like, there are discernible advances. Still the demand for participation persists and, if anything, grows more strident and insistent.

Part of this increased pressure is of course due to the tremendous tasks that remain undone, the still wide gap that exists between black and white standards of living. We shall never satisfy the cry for local control as long as these needs are unmet and rightly so. But a major reason for continued pressure is the beginning that has been made. For out of this limited success, this break in the logjam, have come ever increasing expectations which have far outstripped our capacity to produce.

With a little effort, then, we can understand the pressures for participation. Coming to grips with the effects of these pressures is something else.

Across the country, planners and operators bewail the "inefficiency" and "production losses" attendant on working with the community. One hears dire warnings of "chaos" and of the "new tyranny of local interest groups." Stripped of rhetoric and passion, much of what is said is true.

On the other side we encounter an ideological concern for the value of participation per se. At its logical extreme it becomes an obsession with separatism or a set of theories (like Paul Goodman's) reminiscent of the agrarian, utopian communalists of the early part of the last century. This is absurd in the context of a modern society. Yet, a nation with our traditions confronted with a social revolution cannot treat lightly the drive of citizens to exercise a greater control in public programs.

There are, it is obvious, conceptual contradictions here, but it is unproductive to dwell on them at the abstract level. Such debate quickly becomes tiresome. Logic stops at a contradiction; members of a complex society composed of a variety of diverse interests must proceed. The hallmark of the pragmatic American political system is the ability to reconcile conceptual contradictions, to prevent their becoming insurmountable obstacles.

As a former program director, I understand the administrator's concern about goals, production, and efficiency; and I understand his desire to have a relatively free hand in the interest of getting the job done. Clearly participation does slow things down. It can paralyze a program. And already overburdened staffs must take on additional tasks not directly related to and often inconsistent with the end product. But as did the businessmen of the Thirties, today's public officials, program administrators, and university deans have to accommodate and compromise with a new factor in the power equation.

The issue is no longer whether the community is to be involved, but how it will be involved. It is no longer a matter of the willingness to compromise, but rather whether a proposed trade-off is appropriate to the needs of a set of constituents and consistent with getting the job done. The genius of American politics is just this capacity to handle the art of the trade-off. And a good planner and administrator in the public arena has to be an accomplished practitioner of this political art.

The experience of the last few years yields some lessons that will prove useful to this process of accommodation.

First, there is clearly no one strategy or form for participation. What works well in Watts may be entirely inappropriate for Bedford-Stuyvesant or for a rural area. Each situation is unique, with a different set of institutions, programs, issues and an infinite variety of political components. Thus, no library or seminar can supply a planner with a blueprint or manual specifically tailored to his needs.

It follows that a participation strategist must light his own way. He must be a political artisan who learns the nature, needs, and goals of his constituents. He must work with the leadership of the community, and, most importantly, he must seek out the potentialities for coalition and compromise.

Clearly this requires rejecting the all-too-prevalent notion that politics is a dirty business, that a politician's skills are somehow of a lower order than our own, that trade-offs represent odious wheeling and dealing or a sell-out. Politics is not only involved in getting needed legislation passed; it is also required to make that legislation operational.

Second, it must be remembered that participation is a process. In itself, it is not a program and certainly not a solution. Despite the fact that for some communities participation seems to have replaced delivery of services as the program goal, an administrator cannot allow the process to become the product. To do so is to foredoom the program to failure. The community must recognize that the rhetoric of local control is no substitute for more jobs, completed housing units, or a better education for its children. Philosophical treatises on power do little to warm a slum-inhabitant in the dead of winter.

Third, one of the few axioms that can be applied to dealing with a community, especially an urban ghetto community, is that the nature and quality of the local leadership will determine to what degree a successful participation strategy can be evolved. Yet minority communities are relatively underorganized, and real leaders, though potentially abundant, do not always emerge. This situation contrasts sharply with conditions in earlier ethnic ghettos and requires new perspectives for the planner.

There are a number of reasons for this. One of them is the weakness of the old political machine that had a natural power relationship with the ethnic ghetto. The community had the power of the vote. This vote was organized and delivered by a machine which sustained itself through patronage and a crude version of the welfare system. Most important, this structure offered a way up and out to community members with leadership potential. By largely reforming the machine out of existence, we have closed off this channel of leadership development. Progress in one area seems always to cost us something in another area.

The Community Action Program was designed to provide a new and more structured approach to leadership development. The result is common knowledge. Even limited funds and job opportunities mean potential power, and a messy competition for leadership and control has resulted. Some observers have been scandalized by the spectacle. In his new book Maximum Feasible Misunderstanding, Mr. Moynihan says that "the exercise of power in an effective manner is an ability acquired through apprenticeship and seasoning. Thrust on an individual or a group, the results are often painful to observe, and when what in fact is conveyed is not power, but a kind of play acting at power, the results can be absurd." I think I know what Mr. Moynihan is trying to say.

But it is worth asking whether these programs have not provided at least some opportunities for seasoning and apprenticeship. It is indeed unfortunate that such controversial and often divisive programs have to serve as training grounds, but other ethnic groups also had to go through untidy phases or apprenticeships. They had their share of controversial leaders who were the stuff of front page stories in their day. Today, they are romanticized in historical novels, and their grandsons are an integral part of the American establishment.

It is certain, therefore, that any strategy of participation will have to allow for volatile personalities, confrontations, and a very untidy but very American competition for leadership.

But how does one determine who is the leadership, what is the community, and who adequately represents it? We have learned from painful experience that popular referendum is not necessarily the best method of selecting community leadership. And although there is a proper concern for paternalism, a public official must invariably exercise judgment in a largely subjective process.

The program administrator who must find a way of working with the community must keep in mind the need for broad and diverse representation of community interests. And he must analyze the characteristics of current community leaders who have successfully bridged the gap between their constituents and the instruments of government. He must work with those leaders who have combined a commitment to their people with a strong sense of program and desire for results. These leaders are skillful politicians, and it is they who give citizen participation the flexibility and diversity necessary for programmatic achievement. Perhaps most importantly they help shape community opinion by being sensitive to the operations of the community and being strong and decisive in their operation of programs. They have a sense of power, realizing its potential and the responsibility it entails. Such a leader and the appropriate public official make for an ideal partnership in the business of meeting social needs in the Sixties, each partner intent upon establishing and reinforcing links to the other for the mutual interests of both.

Fourth, anyone devising a strategy for participation must be prepared to share his power but not to abdicate it. There are, to start with, grave questions of competence and efficiency. But there are other considerations too; the goals of the broader society, as well as the very real dangers of new local tyrannies. As in the rest of our society, checks and balances are crucial. Indeed, as someone recently said, if the planning of cities were left entirely to the people's will, all our cities would probably look like Los Angeles or worse -- there probably wouldn't even be a Beverly Hills. And it is worth considering, too, that if it is appropriate for the Federal Government to guarantee voting rights or equal opportunity in Mississippi, should the government not have the option to insure fundamental needs and rights in any locality?

Therefore, nothing of what I have said should be construed as advocating a lessening of the responsibilities or powers of the government. After all, a neighborhood cannot accumulate or allocate general resources; only a centralized government can. The neighborhood cannot by itself support a complex social service system; only a central government can. The neighborhood is a part of the intricate interwoven fabric that is the city; it is not a self contained entity. Only the central city administration is in a position to weigh the needs of each of its parts and make rational judgments about programs which, no matter how local, affect the whole.

The world is too complex for an abatement of governmental powers. If anything, the role of government must be enlarged, if for no other reason than all of the programs depend on a pervasive (and even coercive) taxing system. In fact we will find that effective decentralization and participation depend upon having a high degree of central authority in the government decision making process.

Thus, public policy must now take into account two elements. One, the urgent need to decentralize and to bring constituents into a participatory relationship with public bodies and public programs and, two, the paramount necessity for an active and expanding role for the central government.

All of this, I grant, is more easily said than done. It is a relatively simple business to pontificate on these questions from a lecture platform or, for that matter, to write the Federal guidelines with their neatly balanced sentences and verbal abstractions. It is quite another thing not to produce another Los Angeles or to make a Model Cities program work.

War aside, this will be the dominant issue of our time. My own opinion is that it will not be neatly settled. We are likely to have swings of the pendulum between periods of centralization to meet the frustrations of those who want tangible gains, and periods of diffusion of power when we get fed up with authority. The happier times will be those few years when the pendulum is nearly at rest.

NUMBER 25 RESOURCES FOR THE FUTURE, INC. MAY 1967

The Management of Water

THE ARTICLES appearing in this issue are taken from essays in the recently published book Water Research (see page 6). The book is an outgrowth of a series of water seminars sponsored by Resources for the Future and the Western Resources Conference in 1965. At these seminars students of water resources planning and management—engineers, economists, administrators, lawyers, and political scientists—pooled their knowledge of the state of research in water problems.

WATER IN INDUSTRY

THE AMOUNT OF WATER that industry takes from streams or ground-water aquifers is not the governing factor in industrial use of water. Although for the nation as a whole industry withdraws more water than irrigated agriculture, the quantity it uses up is considerably less. Even so, the way in which the water is utilized in production has a significant effect on water supplies, both in terms of the liquid wastes that are returned to the water courses and of the water actually consumed.

Hence, industry's future needs and requirements for water are a central factor in planning and managing water resources. In this connection past trends of water intake per unit of product or per employee can be very misleading as guides to the future. What explains, for instance, the fact that production of pulp and paper increased by 26 per cent between 1954 and 1959, while the industry's water intake increased by only 8.5 per cent? Or that 104 petroleum refineries increased their refining capacity by over 51 per cent between 1949 and 1959, while their fresh-water intake increased by only 5 per cent?

Clearly, there is a host of implicit factors affecting industrial water utilization. Important among these is the impact of technological change. A few examples point up some of the difficulties in planning as industrial water demand presses more heavily on local water supplies.

• Petroleum refining. Refineries have increased in size and complexity over the last twenty years. Instead of a relatively simple distillation-cracking operation, today's refineries may have, for example, hydrogen-treating units, catalytic reforming units, alkylation units, and units for the production of the entire range of lubricants. Greater refinery complexity results in a large cooling load and larger amounts of water applied per barrel of crude processed; it also can increase the magnitude and complexity of the waste load per barrel. Thus, refinery complexity is one factor operating to increase the industry's total clean-water needs and its waste loads.

Offsetting this effect, however, are other factors, one of which will illustrate how water per unit can be reduced. In a traditional refinery the different processes are typically separated by intermediate storage. In an integrated refinery, the processes are adjacent to each other and are essentially one big unit. Stock is run directly from one unit as the charge to the next unit. Adoption of integration at the Sohio Toledo refinery saved about 10,000 gallons per minute of cooling water capacity.

• Pulp and paper. Higher quality standards for pulp and paper products, together with rising production of colored paper products, account for the continuing increase in total water applied in the production process. Between 1954 and 1959 the total amount of water used to produce a ton of product increased by almost 13 per cent. At the same time, the consumptive use of water per unit—water that is actually used up in the production process — apparently decreased. Why this is so is not clear, but it is conceivable that process changes have resulted in the installation of more closed cooling systems with a consequent reduction in evaporative losses.

The quantity of waste in the final effluent per unit of product has also been reduced, sometimes quite dramatically. How much of the reduction results from changes in production processes and how much from waste treatment cannot yet be determined because the available data do not separate the two types of factors. To illustrate the effect of production process: depending on the method of pulping used, the waste load in pounds of biochemical oxygen demand per ton (BOD is one measure of water quality) can vary from less than 50 to more than 500. Efficient heat and recovery systems can reduce pulp losses, a major contributor to BOD load, by as much as 95 per cent. One kraft mill reduced its average effluent waste load from 57 pounds of BOD per ton in 1955 to 25 pounds per ton in 1960. This was accomplished through tighter plant operation, reuse of process water, constant observation of waste production, and waste treatment.

• Fruit and vegetable canning. Higher standards or more stringent specifications for the quality of canned fruits and vegetables have stimulated the development of new methods for cleaning raw products before they are cooked and canned. As an example, it has been found that if raw tomatoes are dipped in hot lye solution they will be virtually free from fly eggs. But large quantities of water must then be applied to wash out the lye. Another process adopted to improve product quality replaces dry conveying belts with water flumes which carry the product through the plant in a wet condition. Improved technology of these kinds results in an increase in the total quantities of water applied per unit.

So far as waste load is concerned, the story is different. Here, more efficient processing equipment is reducing waste load for every ton of raw product processed. The upward trend in case yield attests to this. Over the last twenty years the average case yield for peaches has increased from forty to about fifty-five cases per ton of raw product processed. As the yield increases, more of the raw product is incorporated in the final output, thereby reducing the waste load. Improved filling operations also favorably affect waste load. Even small amounts of syrup spilled in canning fruit products contribute highly concentrated waste in terms of BOD load. Consequently, any increase in filling efficiency can achieve significant reductions in the waste load per unit of raw product processed.

IT IS EVIDENT from the examples mentioned that most of industry's technological changes have been stimulated by factors unrelated to water problems; more often than not their impact on water utilization has been unanticipated. However, where water is scarce and therefore relatively costly, industry is impelled to conserve it by one means or another.

What measures will best encourage industry to more efficient utilization of water from intake to outlet?

Many advocate providing incentives for industrial plants to construct waste treatment facilities. But this raises some basic questions. Industrial firms analyze water utilization problems in terms of the greatest return per dollar invested. If the cost of constructing waste treatment facilities is reduced by tax incentives, grants, or increased depreciation allowances, these facilities may be adopted more readily than alternative means, such as process changes, by-product recovery, and water recirculation which, by minimizing resource inputs, may result in a more efficient pattern of water utilization from society's viewpoint.

Another approach to the problem is to impose charges based on the amount of waste load carried by the effluent. Where sewer charges have been levied, they appear to have been effective in stimulating industrial firms to modify either production processes or waste treatment methods or both. When one company's utilities division levied intake water and waste disposal charges against each of the company's operating departments at a major plant, it stimulated modifications of production processes as well as of water utilization systems within the departments.

HOWEVER, CHARGES intended to reduce intake and effluent should not be imposed without considering their other possible impacts on water utilization. To illustrate: efficient methods for reducing waste loads in the final effluent can be stabilization ponds, spray irrigation systems, and/or underground disposal. One result of such methods, however, is an increase in the consumptive use or net depletion of water, which may be on the order of 50 per cent in terms of water per unit of raw product processed or per unit of final product. Although small in absolute quantity, increases of this kind may loom large in water-scarce areas. Because the consumptive use of water is the factor limiting the level of economic activity in any area, there can be a conflict between the objective of reducing waste loads and that of minimizing consumptive use.

Consequently, perhaps what should be considered instead of a water intake and/or an effluent charge is a "water utilization" charge which would take into account all aspects of industrial water utilization. Where water is in relatively short supply, such a charge would encourage an industrial plant to reduce its consumptive use. Credits against water utilization charges could be given to those users who achieve this goal. As an example: In the manufacture of tomato products such as paste and catsup, instead of permitting the water extracted from the tomatoes to escape into the atmosphere, facilities could be encouraged that would capture and condense the water for further use.

The water utilization charge would, therefore, be based on the four factors: Quantity of water intake, Consumptive use of water, Quantity of effluent, and Waste load in the effluent. Just how such a charge would be formulated in quantitative terms and what relative weights should be given to the various factors remain matters for further investigation.

BEFORE THE FLOOD

RELATIVE TO ITS RESPONSE to a storm pattern, the river basin may be considered a system: local watersheds respond to local rainfall patterns according to soil moisture, ground cover, average slope, etc., and contribute runoff to tributary streams. Here the drainage channels combine the flows, and waves of discharge are propagated to downstream areas on the main stem. Often the response has been modified by man: forests have been cleared, dams have been constructed across streams, levees alter the flood wave propagation velocity. But whatever its current configuration, if left alone or subjected only to rigid operating rules for reservoir releases, it is in theory a deterministic system. With enough information and computing power the response in terms of flood heights and consequent damages can be predicted for any of an infinite number of storm patterns.

This sounds like a large order, but it is just what engineers have been doing to the best of their ability for a long time. An important part of the design of a dam is the determination of the inflow expected from a "design storm" based on the best available statistics of rainfall and runoff. The downstream channel is then designed on the basis of the expected release rates from the dam.

However, in the design process only a few storm patterns can be used out of the infinity of possibilities. After the design process is complete and the physical works are constructed, the response to each storm pattern as it occurs is then subject to further calculations so that within the physical limitations the best operation is carried out. This is not a simple problem, even for a single reservoir. Consider the position of a decision maker in the midst of a moderate storm as he plans the release rates from a reservoir: his first responsibility is the safety of the dam, but within that restriction he must make releases so that long-term damage to the downstream area is minimized.

What information does he have on which to base his decisions? He knows the current inflow rate to his reservoir, and can project this for a day ahead with fair confidence; he knows how much of the reservoir volume remains vacant and available to take up the difference between inflows and releases; and if there are uncontrolled areas downstream between the dam and a potential damage area, he may know how much of a flood may be coming from such areas and regulate his own releases accordingly. The number of combinations and permutations of these few factors can be accommodated by a set of rules, charts, and nomograms in many cases. That is, there need be no ad hoc human judgment applied for this single reservoir problem.

WERE THE EFFECT of operating all reservoirs in a river basin strictly additive, the above ideas could be extended easily, perhaps with the help of linear programming. Unfortunately, no such simple methods are feasible; the interactions among elements of a multireservoir system cannot be neglected.

To illustrate: Assume that we can see, coming down the main stem of the river, a large flood wave that will arrive at our damage center in about two days. Meanwhile, a local tributary, equipped with a regulating reservoir, is threatening to produce damaging flows in about twelve hours unless we use up storage volume to prevent its doing so. By taking all the upstream information into account, we can arrive at a reasonable estimate of and probable lower limit to the damage from the main stem flood acting alone.

By appropriately manipulating the tributary releases, we can allow an initial heavy flow from a local area in order to save storage space, even though this will produce damages that would not otherwise have occurred so soon. Later this storage space will be used to allow the tributary to be completely shut down as the main flood goes by. Thus, by taking our damages ahead of time, we may be able to reduce the overall damage during the worst period.

In a large system there are likely to be many such opportunities during a flood emergency; however, each of them will be unique, and there is likely to be an astronomical number of possible situations. . . .

Linear and dynamic programming are capable of analyzing problems of astonishing complexity—so long as the independent variables enter in a linear way. However, when interactions and other nonlinearities do enter, they compound the problem not in an additive way but in an exponential way. . . .It appears that we could step up computer speed and memory capacity by a factor of a hundred and still not feel any more hopeful about the usefulness of these programming methods for the problem we are discussing.

An important factor in extending the number of variables is that each physical variable changes with time, and in the ordinary optimization schemes its value during each interval of time becomes a new mathematical variable. However, this new sequence is ordered, for later values cannot affect earlier ones; dynamic programming takes advantage of this fact. Simulation takes advantage of it too, in an implicit way, for it is a method of calculating at each instant the progress of phenomena that would take place in the prototype according to the parameters and inputs assumed.

Whatever the physical means of carrying out the simulation, there will be a branch point each time a decision must be made; and as in a chess game, the number of individual paths through all the branches quickly becomes astronomical. Thus it appears that introducing human judgment at critical points, within the simulation, will be very helpful; some would say essential.

This leads us towards the concept of man-machine interaction in which the machine provides the high-speed computing or simulation under the currently prescribed conditions and decisions, and the human operator provides the decisions that steer successive simulations toward an optimum. . . .

The analog simulators the Hydraulics Laboratory at the University of California, Berkeley, has been building are designed for very fast operation and for easy communication to and from the human operator. The Kansas River analog model, for example, completes sixty simulations per second; consequently, the output display on a cathode ray oscilloscope is presented without a flicker that is apparent to the eye. This model, the development of which was supported by the Kansas City District of the Army Corps of Engineers, and completed in 1964, represents the first application of analog simulation techniques to a river basin.

The basic idea of such simulators is that they obey the same equations, relative to the electrical currents and voltages involved, as govern the actual prototype variables. In this case, electrical current corresponds to discharge, and voltage corresponds to water levels above a local datum. The analog, which is a large network of special circuits, simulates all the pertinent properties of the flood control system: the ability to transmit waves having the correct celerity from one point to another, to attenuate these waves or to allow them to build up according to the channel properties, to store electrical charge in the way reservoirs store water, and to be subject to all the manipulations to which the flood control system is subject. This is quite an order, and has been achieved through a large number of ingenious circuit designs in which the physical features of the flood control system are simulated. . . . The operator then can see displayed before him in almost instantaneous fashion the results of whatever reservoir release schedule he has established. He can increase by an arbitrary amount the release from an upstream reservoir during a particular six-hour period, note that the resulting flood wave will overtop a levee fifty miles downstream, and reduce the release back to its original amount, all in less time than it takes to describe his actions. Because the machine is so responsive, he can try out all kinds of schemes, and can just as quickly reject the unworkable ones.

In Looking Back over our experience with analog simulators at Berkeley, it seems to me that the most important conclusion has been that the human mind, with its capacity to integrate and hold together a vast amount of information and to formulate decisions on this basis, must be brought into interaction with computing machinery, of whatever sort, if we are to successfully optimize the operation of large systems. At one time we were dazzled by the seemingly inexhaustible capacity of the computer for enormously extended analysis. Now we realize that as the degree of system complexity goes up, the permutations rise exponentially, and some commonsense limitations must be made on the alternative possible paths to optimizing a solution. So far as I can see, there will never be a substitute for this function of the human mind; therefore we must search for ways that can accommodate this important part of the man-machine team as a real equal, and not as a second-class partner off at a desk somewhere. In this search the analog simulators have made a significant contribution.

Willing to Pay

RECREATION SERVICES have only recently been recognized as products of land and water resources. As such, they offer problems of evaluation that do not occur when dealing with most goods and services—for example steel and lumber. Conflicting demands for commodities such as these are resolved largely in the market places of the private economy, where users bid against each other for the limited supplies. Outdoor recreation, however, has developed largely as a non-market commodity. This absence of a market makes it necessary to impute values to the production of recreation services.

No goods or services are priceless. There is an individual and collective limit to how much we will give up to enjoy the services of any outdoor recreation facility or to preserve any scenic resource. It is our belief, therefore, that the most relevant economic measure of recreation values is willingness on the part of consumers to pay for outdoor recreation services. This set of values is comparable to economic values established for other commodities, for it is the willingness to give up on the part of consumers that establishes values throughout the economy.

Economists are experimenting with several ways of measuring the recreationist's "willingness to pay." One of these, the direct interview method briefly described below, shows promise of being reasonably effective.

Through a properly constructed interview approach one can elicit from recreationists information concerning the maximum price they would pay in order to avoid being deprived of the use of a particular area for whatever use they may make of it. The procedure is based on the assumption that the recreationist has made a rational series of allocations of time and money in order to participate in the recreation being evaluated. Since the opportunity itself is available at zero or nominal price, the interview provides the means for discovering the price the person would pay if this opportunity were marketed.

The chief problem to be reckoned with is the degree of reliability that can be attached to the information the respondent provides the interviewer. Particularly on questions dealing with matters of opinion, the responses are subject to many kinds of bias. Consequently, it is advisable to phrase the questions in such a way that the recreationist is not asked to give his opinion on the propriety of charging for the use of recreation areas. In survey methodology, it has been found that the less hypothetical the question, the more stable and reliable is the response. Following this principle, the respondent ought to be a consumer of the product rather than a potential consumer. It may also be preferable to conduct the interview when the respondent is at the site of the activity. This may contribute to the accuracy of the responses by reducing his need to project from one situation to another.

THE INTERVIEW method was tested out on a sample of users of a forest recreation area in northern Maine. The interviews included a bidding game in which respondents could react to increased costs of visiting the area. Bids were systematically raised or lowered until the user switched his reaction from inclusion to exclusion or vice versa. The bidding questions were interspersed with a series of propositions for which the respondent was to indicate his opinion in the form of a positive, negative, or neutral reaction. His reactions to increased expenses connected with the visit constituted the essence of the bidding game.

Those interviewed included hunters, fishermen, and summer campers. Each respondent was asked questions relating to household willingness to pay, household income, years of acquaintance with the area visited, and length of visit. For the sample of 185 interviews, willingness-to-pay-per-household-day ranged from zero to $16.66, and the value that occurred most frequently was between $1.00 and $2.00 per day per household.

Respondents' comments indicated that they were turning over in their minds the alternatives available in much the same way that a shopper considers the price and desirability of different cuts or kinds of meat. This, and a certain amount of internal consistency in the responses suggest that considerable weight can be attached to the interview responses for assessing a recreationist's willingness to pay as a means of measuring recreation values.

FORESTS AS RESERVOIRS

PERHAPS HALF of the major river systems of the West comes from melting snowpacks. These snowpacks act as huge reservoirs, "spilling" their water over long periods in the spring and in the early summer. Research in forest practices has indicated that we can manage the snowpack reservoirs, both to yield more water and to improve the time of delivery to meet our water needs.

Several studies have compared the effects of different types of logging, such as selective cutting, strip cutting, block cutting, and sequential cutting, on snow accumulation and melt and on soil moisture losses. These studies furnish clues to relative effectiveness of management techniques in improving water yield from snow.

Strip cutting has some advantages over block cutting, in part because the narrow clear-cut strip retains snow for a longer period than the clear-cut larger block, and so can deliver more water later in the spring.

The full effectiveness of strip cutting cannot be evaluated by simple comparison of the amount of snow in the strip and in the adjacent forest. Analyses of more than fifty-eight snow courses in the central Sierra of California have shown that increases in accumulated snow resulting from strip cutting occur not only in the cut opening but also in the adjacent forest. An experimental cutting in the Tahoe National Forest, near Yuba Pass, California, illustrates this point.

THE YUBA PASS cutting consisted of five east-west strips, 0.6 mile long, 135 feet wide, and 400 feet apart. The cutting permitted comparison of the total snow accumulation and rate of snow melt under five different treatments: slash piled strips, slash lopped strips, strips with small trees left, strips with slash dozed downhill, and wall-and-step strips. The last type of treatment (illustrated) achieved by far the largest snow accumulation.

Cutting was in an old-growth red fir stand on a 15 per cent north slope at an elevation of 6,700 feet. The snowpack was measured at some 400 points on April 24, 1963 —about the time of the maximum pack—and again on May 21, when about 60 per cent of the pack had melted. The snow in the center of uncut forest averaged 19 inches of water equivalent on April 24, and 7.7 inches on May 21. Increases in the snow associated with the wall-and-step cut strip amounted to 18.9 inches of water, and increases for the whole forest measured 4.7 inches of snow water. The treatment increased the total snow accumulation by 25 per cent for the forest as a whole. Seventy per cent of the forest's increase persisted as delayed melt until May 21.

An increase of this proportion is important enough to encourage management of these high-elevation forests for water yield. In view of later reports from forest officers indicating "little or no blowdown in the severe October storm" and "an economical logging show," it is not too much to hope that treatments of this kind may be feasible.

THE HEAVY ANVIL

OPTIMAL GOALS in flood management may be farther away because of the emphasis federal agencies and their academic reformers have placed upon normative economic analysis. Refinement of the benefit-cost practices has directed attention to what should be engineering investment in flood plains rather than to explaining the present use of the plains. While there is much room for improvement and while benefit-cost analysis would be enhanced by insight into managerial behavior, it detours the realistic prediction of future use. By assuming the managers of flood plain property are either optimizing, rational men, or narrow, inflexible men, it avoids difficulties that would arise were account taken of information lacks; interpretation of information; differing perception of hazard, technology, and efficiency; differing decision rules; and inconsistent social guides.

Having prescribed a simple cure, there is little incentive for the government doctor to return to the bedside to find out what happened to the patient. Public doubts about economic justification are soothed by B/C ratios exceeding unity while public side-effects are largely ignored. It should not be abandoned, but the weight of its authority should not be carried unless it is used to help explain the vital question of what will be the future use if a given adjustment or use is adopted.

One day a short, sturdy Maine blacksmith, after long wooing the willowy village belle, won her consent to marriage as they talked in his shop. Enthusiastically, he jumped onto the anvil and kissed her. Then they walked hand in hand out across the meadows. "Shall we kiss again?" he asked. "Not yet," she said. Farther on he again put the question. "But why do you keep asking?" she replied. "Because," he said, "if there isn't going to be any more kissing, I'll stop carrying this anvil." Normative economic analysis is an anvil that can serve several important uses, including intangible aesthetic ones, but there isn't much point in carrying its weight unless it is used properly.

CLEAN WATER FOR GEORGIA'S ESTUARIES

U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development

basic water and sewer facilities grants

HUD's Water and Sewer Facilities Grant Program helps communities stretch their limited financial resources to provide needed public services for their citizens. But water and sewer system development can contribute much more than basic service facilities. Communities that initiate wisely planned projects are responding effectively to social needs as well. Such projects frequently trigger local employment opportunities, promote an increased housing supply, and provide an atmosphere conducive to economic growth.

The Grant

Local public bodies and agencies may apply to HUD for grants to finance up to 50 percent of the cost of building new water or sewer systems or of enlarging, improving, or rehabilitating present facilities. HUD will supplement the grant to cover relocation payments to individuals, families, and businesses displaced from land acquired for a project.

The Applicant

To qualify for a grant, the applicant must be a city, town, county, Indian tribe or a public agency of one or more States or cities. The applicant must have adequate legal authority to plan, finance, build, and operate the proposed project.

Application forms and detailed program information are available at HUD Regional Offices serving areas where projects will be located. See the back of this leaflet for a list of HUD offices.

The Project

HUD's grant funds are limited and each project application must be weighed for eligibility. To qualify for assistance, a proposed water or sewer facility must be necessary to improve health or living standards and to promote community development.

It must be designed with a capacity to meet projected area growth needs and must be consistent with area plans for a unified water or sewer system. For a more detailed explanation of HUD's planning requirements, obtain a copy of the Water and Sewer Facilities Planning Requirements Guide from the nearest HUD Regional Office.

Another important measure of the project's value is the effect it will have upon crucial community problems. Typical problems might include housing low- and moderate-income families or abolishing patterns of housing discrimination.

Water systems may include facilities to store, supply, treat, purify or distribute enough water for domestic, commercial, and industrial use. Sewer facilities may include sanitary sewer systems to collect, transmit, and discharge liquid wastes. HUD-assisted projects may not include treatment works eligible for assistance under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (P.L. 84-660). Sewer projects also may include storm sewer systems to collect, transmit, and discharge storm water caused by rainfall or ground water runoff.

Applicants for HUD water and sewer grants may not use them to finance ordinary repairs or to maintain existing facilities. Nor may they use them to refund outstanding bonds, liquidate other liabilities, or purchase existing systems. Project costs or obligations incurred before a grant agreement is executed with HUD are not eligible for grant assistance.

Funding the Project

The applicant receives grant funds from HUD in installments that are scheduled to keep the project adequately funded. The Federal grant funds and the local share are deposited in an approved financial institution, designated by the applicant.

Usually, Federal grant payments begin after the applicant's share has been provided and expended for approximately 40 percent of the project cost.

HUD advances funds for relocation payments to those who will be displaced by the project in sufficient time to pay approved claims. The applicant, in turn, must maintain complete records of all relocations and payments. The claimants to whom payments are made may be displaced individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations.

HUD withholds 10 percent of the grant until the applicant completes the project and furnishes an acceptable audit.

Acquiring Land for the Project

The applicant is required by law to follow prescribed policies in acquiring land by eminent domain. HUD must receive a Land Acquisition Policy Statement assuring that:

- The applicant will make every reasonable effort to acquire the real property by negotiated purchase before instituting eminent domain proceedings.

- An owner will not be required to surrender possession of his property until he has been paid either an agreed purchase price or not less than 75 percent of the appraised fair value, as approved by the applicant and concurred in by HUD.

- A person lawfully occupying property will not be required to surrender possession without at least 90 days' written notice of the date on which possession will be required.

The project applicant must document compliance with this policy by maintaining records of all actions, including negotiations with property owners.

Design and Construction

HUD-assisted facilities must be of economical design, construction, and materials. The applicant and the project engineer develop and prepare all project plans and specifications. In addition, they submit to HUD evidence that all regulatory bodies having jurisdiction over planning, construction, and operation of the proposed facilities have approved the project.

Construction contracts are awarded on the basis of competitive bidding to the lowest responsible bidder. The selected contractor must furnish satisfactory performance and payment bonds.

The applicant is required to provide competent supervision and inspection of construction. HUD field engineers visit the project during construction, according to the conditions governing Federal grant assistance. HUD is required to charge a fee for project inspection.

Water Pollution Control Certification

Before approving an application for grant assistance to construct a sewer facility, HUD initiates a request for certification from the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration (FWPCA), Department of the Interior. The FWPCA requires assurance that any waste material carried by the facility will be treated before it is discharged into any public waterway. This assurance is required to meet applicable Federal, State, interstate, or local water quality standards.

Labor Requirements

Wage rates paid for labor must not be less than the prevailing wage determined by the U.S. Department of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act and set forth in the construction contract.

The construction contract also is subject to the Contract Work Hours Standards Act (P.L. 87-581) and to applicable regulations of the U.S. Department of Labor.

Equal Opportunity

Generally, HUD-assisted projects are reviewed for their contribution to advancing the national housing goals and responding to human needs. Such projects may not promote conditions which result in discrimination in housing opportunities or inequities in employment of racial or other minority groups.

For example, a proposed public facility cannot qualify for HUD aid if its construction will result in unfair or discriminatory provision of a needed public service.

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and HUD regulations prohibit discrimination on the grounds of race, color, or national origin in housing and facilities provided with Federal financial assistance.

Contractors and subcontractors engaged in the construction of housing or facilities receiving Federal financial assistance are required not to discriminate and to adopt an affirmative action program to achieve equal employment opportunity.

Applicants for assistance under HUD programs will be notified at the earliest possible time—usually before filing formal application—of the relevant equal opportunity provisions that apply to the housing or facilities involved in the application. At such time, any questions regarding equal opportunity can be answered specifically and in detail.

The Water and Sewer Facilities Grant Program is administered by the Assistant Secretary for Metropolitan Planning and Development. It is authorized by Title VII of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

HAVE WE GOT WHAT IT TAKES?

HOW TO GET RID OF SMOG

To get a working handhold on the smog problem in California today, it is necessary to glance back over the 30 or more years in which it has been developing.

In the 1930's, Los Angeles County, with a population of a little over two million, was aware that her matchless climate was blemished by air pollution. But air pollution in the 1930's bore little resemblance to today's. No one had heard of hydrocarbons or smog, and the petroleum refining industry, distinctly second in importance to the motion picture industry, was blamed only for producing noxious odors. In the Long Beach area, residents frequently complained about the odorous sulfurous gases released at night from certain refinery units and irritant gases which resulted from the burning or dumping of acid sludge. At about this time, long before the entrance of government into the field of air pollution control, the oil industry, itself, employed a technical inspector who was charged with the duty of keeping a 24-hour surveillance of the refineries and vested him with authority to enter refinery premises and halt any operation producing an odor nuisance.

Fish canneries and reduction plants at Terminal Island, rendering plants at Bandini, as well as hog ranches and sewer farms, all felt the brunt of public resentment which led local health departments to bring action against the offenders under nuisance statutes.

By far the most spectacular source of smoke during this period stemmed from the practice of orchard heating. The great citrus belt of Southern California, sweeping through the San Gabriel and Pomona Valleys of Los Angeles County, constituted the major bulwark of the economic life of the communities in that area. Several times each year frost threatened not only the crops, but on colder nights, the trees themselves.

The smudge pot was then the most respectable means of raising the temperatures of the air in the orchard the necessary few degrees, but if that did not prove adequate, the ranchers burned old rubber tires and crude oil. Smoke was then considered as important as heat. After a night of heavy firing, a pall of soot which literally blacked out the sun enveloped the valley towns. It is interesting to reflect back upon the almost unlimited tolerance of the people of the valley towns of that day to this deliberately imposed, massive defilement of air. Their tolerance stemmed from their conviction that the pollution was unavoidably necessary and that at worst it would last no more than a day or two.

Two other sources of air pollution which plagued Los Angeles County 30 years ago were forest fires and dust storms. Devastating fires would occasionally ravage the forest slopes of the Sierra Madre Range. More frequently, the dreaded Santa Ana dust storms from the deserts of San Bernardino and Riverside Counties filled the air of San Gabriel Valley, giving it the appearance of present-day smog.

Ten years later, in the early 1940's, significant changes had taken place in the air pollution situation. Industries which manufactured or used huge quantities of volatile chemicals were moving into the area. Los Angeles County had become a major aircraft manufacturing center. A butadiene plant was built in the heart of Los Angeles. The total capacity of Los Angeles County's oil refineries had increased only by a few percent, but the refining process had undergone a profound change, with cracked gasoline, produced by catalytic processes, augmenting the previous straight-run and thermally-cracked gasolines. This resulted in a motor fuel with markedly different characteristics. The number of motor vehicles had increased only about 50 percent over a 10-year period, but the compression ratio of the internal combustion engine had gone up (with resultant increased temperature of combustion), and the motor vehicle itself had become a low-grade gasoline-cracking plant. The number of diesel trucks on the highways, and the volume of fuel oil and natural gas burned in homes, public buildings, and industry increased greatly over the 1930's.

One of the nation's top environmental engineers lays the basic smog question on the line and asks Californians whether they will pay the price for clean air. For the first time a government official eminent in the field of air pollution states that the primary culprit must go. In his words, "It is clearly evident, therefore, that between now and 1980 the gasoline-powered engine must be phased out . . . The only realistic way to bring about this historic kind of changeover on schedule is to demand it by law in the public interest; that is, to serve legal notice that after 1980 no gasoline-powered motor vehicles will be permitted to operate in California."

The effects of air pollution had, by now, undergone considerable change. The major sources of odor prevalent in 1930 had been largely cured. Fish reduction plants now used steam-jacketed driers; refineries were collecting their fumes and burning them; rendering plants were oxidizing their odorous vapors with combustion, chlorine, or chlorine dioxide gas, or scrubbing them with liquids containing a neutralizing agent. Acid sludge was being shipped by rail to a plant in the San Francisco Bay for conversion into ammonium sulfate. Orchard heating had been rendered relatively smokeless, partly as a result of improved oil heating design, and partly as a result of the use of butane heaters or wind machines in many orchards. (The idea of the necessity for smoke itself had been proved false.) Sewer farms were a thing of the past.

These changes in the sources of air pollution began to make dramatic changes in the symptoms of air pollution. Odors were diminished but eye irritation began, and the word "smog" came into our vocabulary. People began to notice that the transparency of the air on which they had prided themselves was gone even on many days when there were no dust storms, forest fires, or orchard heating. They suspected that something besides natural haze was the cause.

In characteristic fashion, they demanded that something be done — although we were then at war — and the governing body of Los Angeles County named the county health officer as "air pollution officer." The Los Angeles City Council also instructed its health department to get into action. The biggest detective story of the century was begun.

Starting with the clue of eye irritation, the first smog fighters began to sample the air for known gaseous irritants encountered in industry — acrolein, other aldehydes, sulfur dioxide, sulfur trioxide, and nitrogen dioxide. They were fortified by 25 years of experience in coping with these irritant gases in industry. Threshold limits, called "maximum allowable concentration," had been established for each. It was possible to find all of these substances in the air of Los Angeles County, but they were seldom present at a concentration of as much as one-tenth that which industrial experience showed to be the threshold of concern. Furthermore, when one added up all the known quantities of these compounds discharged into the air and then divided by the volume of air in the basin, even on days of low ceiling, it was evident that the industrial thresholds could not possibly be reached in the total air mass.

Consequently, there began a search for an unknown culprit, a search which still continues today. It became evident that air volume available for diluting wastes was a key factor, and meteorologists were brought into the investigation. The concept remained, however, that the guilty substance was by design, or accident, being introduced into the air at some one place. The problem consisted of identifying it, locating its source, and "shutting it off."

But as time moved inexorably onward, the situation worsened, and the people, with rising impatience and uneasiness, demanded action. And action they got. First, local governing bodies enacted local ordinances; then the State Legislature, now freed from the restraining effect of the war, enacted a statute making air pollution, in effect, a crime. Full use of the police power was authorized to abate the discharge of virtually any foreign substance into the air. Glaringly absent was any significant provision for research. This was an emergency and there was no time for the slow, laborious, scientific unraveling of the obviously complex problem.

In 1950 the break came. Professor A. J. Haagen-Smit, a professor of biochemistry at the California Institute of Technology, demonstrated that smog was the result of a chemical reaction in the atmosphere itself, that smog was not just the sum total of things dumped into the air. He showed that when hydrocarbons (gasoline vapors) and oxides of nitrogen (in every high temperature combustion, some of the nitrogen in air is oxidized) are mixed in the presence of ultraviolet light (sunlight) they undergo a series of reactions terminating in the formation of a new group of irritating compounds which he termed "oxidants." For the first time, then, even though the specific composition of the oxidants had not been established (and still hasn't), the raw materials of the brew were known and the great detective hunt was over. It was now possible to seek out the sources of hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen and shut them off.

The key facts soon came to light. The principal source of energy production in California is petroleum combustion. The production and transportation of liquid petroleum products, principally gasoline, result in the loss to the atmosphere of many tons of gasoline vapor per day. Any combustion of petroleum, or other fuel, results in production of oxides of nitrogen which are discharged into the air along with smoke, carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, sulfur dioxide, and other pollutants. These facts pointed the finger at every home, factory, public building, and motor vehicle in the state. From the dilemma of having no culprit, we found ourselves in the absurd predicament in which everyone was a culprit.

For the next ten years, the state, local governments, and industry embarked upon a truly epical effort on many fronts.

Local air pollution districts established and enforced strict regulations governing the emission of virtually all types of waste gases and solids to the atmosphere. Universities and research institutions plunged into pioneering efforts to elucidate the mysteries of the newly discovered reactions in the atmosphere. Meteorologists throughout the country began, for the first time, to study the forces of air behavior close to the ground where smog is formed and trapped, rather than aloft where weather is made and planes fly. The state mounted a comprehensive program of measuring, for the first time, the air quality in the many regions of the state and began to equate this quality to the time and location of emissions, both fixed and moving. The automobile industry, sensing its coming major involvement in the problem, began intensive study.

The picture began to emerge unmistakably clear. The classic problems of dust, smoke, odor, sulfur dioxide, and carbon monoxide were all present in California. But the dominant factor was photochemical smog, which was attributable directly to hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen, that is, to the combustion of petroleum. Classic regulatory approaches had shown their efficacy in coping with air pollutants from fixed sources of emission, except for oxides of nitrogen; but the motor vehicle emerged as the dominant element, which uncontrolled could by itself so pollute the air of California cities as to make them uninhabitable.

In 1959, the legislature directed the State Department of Public Health to establish standards for the air, and, based on these standards, to establish limits for motor vehicle emissions. It also established a Motor Vehicle Pollution Control Board to test control devices, and when effective devices, or systems, were available, to require them on California cars. Thus, 30 years after air pollution was first recognized as a public problem in California, the state openly acknowledged what the problem really was and provided the legal muscle to tackle it.

The rest is history familiar to everyone. The state set standards at three levels: a "clean air" standard, a standard of "public health concern," and a "disaster level" standard. Next, the state decided that the motor vehicle control program should be based upon the "clean air" standard and established standards for motor vehicle emission on this basis. The standard for hydrocarbon called for an 80 percent reduction in the average emissions from motor vehicles. No devices were available which could meet this standard and, not until 1966, did they appear on new cars sold in California.

The state now faces a crisis in its motor vehicle control program. Because half of the cars in California are more than five years old, the effect of the new control devices will not be noticeable for several years. The 80 percent reduction, itself, will become inadequate in 1970 because of the increase in the number of cars, so new motor vehicle emission standards have already been set for 1970 which call for reductions considerably greater than 80 percent. This standard itself would hold the line only until 1980. It remains to be seen whether with internal combustion engines the motorcar manufacturers will be able to meet this 1970 standard. Obviously, we are near the end of the road on this approach if the number of motorcars continues to increase.

This year the state set air standards for oxides of nitrogen, but these are based upon health effects and color, not upon the role which oxides of nitrogen play in the photochemical reaction. A fierce debate now rages in technical circles as to whether it is practical to lower oxides of nitrogen in motor vehicle exhaust to levels which will alleviate the photochemical reaction, particularly since these gases are not now controlled in fixed installations.

Stripping away all of the fine points of the technical debate, one conclusion is inescapable. If we are to have clean, transparent, and non-irritating air in our basins, we must control the number of gasoline-powered motor vehicles that operate in them. Can we do it? The answer lies in our response to two very basic and gutty issues:

1. The first issue involves the conflict between individual choice and the public interest. In this instance, the individual choice is the choice to drive one's own car. This is not so much a matter of cost, or even convenience, as it is a deep-seated question of culture and self-image. When man first mounted a horse and identified himself with it, he became a superior individual with capabilities, authority, and prestige far superior to those of his pedestrian counterpart. The West was won by men on horseback and the private motorcar is today's horse. It is difficult for a Westerner to understand how a resident of New York City can possibly get along without his own "mount." So it is idle to plan that Californians are going to give up their individual automobiles. They simply aren't. I think it is possible to make a bargain with many of them to leave their "horses" at the perimeter of congested urban areas if we can build public urban transportation systems which base their appeal not only on comfort and economy, but on speed, novelty, and exhilaration of the ride. But while the creation of such systems may partially reduce smog, at least temporarily, they will not solve the problem no matter how fervently we wish they might.

2. The second basic issue has to do with the freedom of private enterprise when the public interest is involved. The private enterprise at stake here is the motorcar manufacturing industry, and the key question is the kind of power plant provided to propel the motor vehicle. Now, indeed, we have arrived at the very crux of the problem. California has, to all intents and purposes, a fixed air capacity to receive wastes, and this capacity will soon be overtaxed over vast regions of the state even with full use of mass transit, if the internal combustion gasoline engine in its present form continues to be the power source for motor vehicles. If urban and industrial development continue as predicted, by the year 1980 fixed sources of air pollution alone will place the maximum burden on the atmosphere compatible with good air quality, even though the sources are fully regulated. After 1980, combustion sources of power development in fixed installations must be progressively replaced with nuclear sources if clean air is to be maintained, even though the motor vehicle exhausts are eliminated.

It is clearly evident, therefore, that between now and 1980 the gasoline-powered engine must be phased out and replaced with an electrical power package or at least one which does not emit hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen. This is far too fast a changeover to be accomplished by private enterprise on a voluntary basis. One reason is the massive capital investment that must be "suddenly" written off. A more formidable obstacle is the high cost of a crash program of development of a new power source. An even greater deterrent is the risk to private enterprise that for the first few years the new power source may lack some of the attributes of performance that are possessed by the gasoline engine and prized by its driver, so that the innovator would be at a competitive disadvantage.

The only realistic way to bring about this historic kind of changeover on schedule is to demand it by law in the public interest; that is, to serve legal notice that after 1980 no gasoline-powered motor vehicles will be permitted to operate in California.

This idea, in turn, raises the question of public understanding and support, without which no such law could be passed or enforced.

So we are back at long last to where we started — with the people. What will it cost them and is it worth it? It is not unreasonable to assume that a new type of power plant, including its developmental costs, would increase the average cost of motor vehicles during the changeover period by $500 per car. If the people knew this, how would they react? I believe that if the question were properly presented, the people would say "yes." The $500 extra car cost, spread over a five-year vehicle life, amounts to $100 per year per car, or $100 per year per working adult (in California there is roughly one car per person of wage earning age). It will cost each responsible adult citizen of California 28 cents a day over a 10-year period to eliminate once and for all the murky skies and choking smog that now typify what once was the Golden State. Surely, in this land of affluence, that's a bargain.

As a last-ditch plea for delay, someone is sure to ask, "How do we know a new exhaust-free power package can be developed on a crash schedule?" The answer is that it's merely a matter of hardware that can be produced on demand if we are willing to pay a modest premium. No new principles of energy conversion are involved. The new power source can be far more efficient and, ultimately, it will give us a horse under the hood that will bring back the thrill of that first car.

Frank Stead has stated the smog issue clearly, and his conclusions are inescapable. California can no longer tolerate the destruction of its air resource by the gasoline-powered motor vehicle. The importance of the motor vehicle and petroleum industries to the economy and wealth of California requires that their manufacturing and production ingenuity be exploited for the development of propulsion systems which do not pollute the air. The issue is not so much removing the motor vehicle but rather having a power plant which produces no pollutants, a clean propulsion system for the motor vehicle. Therefore, the state must stipulate emission standards or requirements which prohibit the sale and use of gasoline-powered vehicles as we know them today.

WEST MT. AIRY NEIGHBORS

ANNUAL REPORT

1964

PRESIDENT'S REPORT
THE WEST MT. AIRY NEIGHBORS
ANNUAL MEETING, FEBRUARY 8, 1965
Matthew W. Bullock, Jr.

In this day and age, with the newspaper headlines full of crime waves, Mississippi social insecurity and sexual revolutions, being president of West Mt. Airy Neighbors has seemed something of an anacronism. Six years ago our community, too, was swept with unrest; rumors were rife and fear was the order of the day: fear of change - neighborhood change, school change, racial change - fear that the community somehow had reached the end of its life as a calm, stable, beautiful community.

West Mt. Airy Neighbors was established to turn fear into hope, to turn confusion into organized and constructive community activity. We were formed to meet a need and we were welcomed by the community with open arms.

Today, six years later, West Mt. Airy is more vital than ever. Not only is our neighborhood, with its homes and its natural amenities, as beautiful as ever, but the area has taken on something new, a spiritual something which has meaning not only for the residents but for the outside world. People are seeking homes in West Mt. Airy because they want to live in the kind of atmosphere our community offers. Other areas are eager to hear of our experience.

I think that, in a sense, the first phase of our organization's life is over. We have put out the fires we were created to combat. I do not mean that negative pressures on the area have ceased completely, but our handling of them has become routine. We shall continue our vigilance as to zoning, real estate practice and such matters. We can, however, no longer capitalize on fear as a motivation for involving our membership. We are at the point where if we are not careful, complacency can easily take over and some of our gains can slip silently away. Our dynamism as an organization and a community depends upon our ever re-examining and revamping our community ideals and activities.

Personally, I have mingled feelings about the past year. On the one hand it has been a privilege to serve an organization of this kind. On the other there is the frustration of not having achieved all that I would like to have achieved as president during this period. We have held our own in membership with a high percentage of new people coming into the area joining our organization. We have instituted some new activities; our Women's Activities Committee, our special committee working with the West Sharpnack Area Civic Association, our Library Series Committee. You will hear more of these activities, if not later this evening, in our newsletters. I want to speak a moment however, about our cooperative efforts with the Sharpnack Area Civic Association, because I feel that this activity typifies our organization. Early last year, residents in the West Sharpnack area approached us about some of their problems. I felt that if our organization was worthy of its name then all our members in whatever area should be interested in the problems of other areas. When I named a committee to work with the Sharpnack Association, not only did it accept the responsibility enthusiastically but we had additional volunteers. It was a constructive learning experience for all who participated; you will hear more of this later this evening. Also during the past year our Railroad Station Committee for the first time solicited contributions and paid for some cuttings of growth around the railroads during the summer. We received excellent cooperation from the public and intend to expand this activity during the coming year.

Financially, we have also maintained ourselves despite increased cost of operation. We increased substantially our outlay on stationery and mailing during the past year. We also gave a small and much merited increase in salary to Ruth Steele, our most capable executive secretary whom we are so fortunate to have. We did not have the income from a house tour because, after a long and exhaustive search, we could not form a committee to organize it. On the other hand, we solicited and recieved additional contributions from our members. I am hopeful that in the future we can expect larger memberships than the average seven dollars or so we have received during the past year. I certainly believe our organization deserves this.

As a result of my experience during the past year, I have had certain thoughts about the functioning of our association. We have sought for our Board influential and prestigious people - people whose names would inspire recognition wherever our letterhead went. I believe the initial wisdom of this has proven itself. Only incidentally, however, were these Board members representative of established groups within the community. Although we have sought turnover on our Board there has been a certain degree of self-perpetuation. I, for example, have been on the Board or the Advisory Board since the organization's inception. It is my impression that the leadership of the organization could afford to be closer to the membership and draw more broadly from it. In recognition of this fact the Board acted this past fall to hold a series of local area meetings of members to get closer to the specific problems in the various sections of our area. Also for the past two years or so our membership committee has worked on establishing a list of block captains to aid the enlisting of members. I feel that this activity should be broadened and perhaps formalized so that we have a large and constant group of members who are, as it were, the grass roots of the organization periodically in contact with the officers and Board members. Such a group could facilitate our introduction of new members to the organization and better enlist their active involvement in it.

It has also occurred to me that we could perhaps use the Advisory Board more effectively. This group is composed of still active former Board members and officers. They are authorized to attend Board meetings but not to vote. They have never met as a separate group. Since Board meetings tend to be dominated by month to month activities, perhaps the Advisory Board, or a similar group could serve a useful purpose in sitting down, reviewing our basic goals and procedures, and making recommendations to the Board.

What are the future prospects for the West Mt. Airy Neighbors? To me this is a very exciting question. We shall, of course, continue our established activities and will become increasingly involved in the municipal planning for the Germantown area. More important, however, in a society which is turbulent with change in the area of human relations, our organization and our community are in the vanguard. We have already learned many lessons

More important, however, in a society which is turbulent with change in the area of human relations, our organization and our community are in the vanguard. We have already learned many lessons that many other communities have not yet even faced. It is a fascinating fact that civil rights issues have inevitably raised a variety of positive issues. You can't look at school integration without also questioning the quality of education in general. You can't look at job integration without looking at the whole problem of manpower utilization. Similarly, you can't look at integration of neighborhoods without questioning the meaning of community. The elimination of fear opens new horizons in human experience. In a society characterized too much by personal alienation, the recognition of other human beings, however different, as a spiritual resource is increasing. This is at once an individual and a social awakening. I have been impressed with the number of people whom I have met who speak of West Mt. Airy as though the community has nurtured a kind of vital spark within them. We do have a special atmosphere or flavor, call it what you will, that intensifies our feeling of humanity. The destiny of the West Mt. Airy Neighbors is to continue to nurture this feeling. We will continue to work for increasing the amenities of the area, for intensifying the physical beauty of the area, for more facile contact between all the members of the community, for the maximum utilization of our organizational resources, such as our Allens Lane Art Center. In our nation in which there is so much talk of the "Great Society", West Mt. Airy is progressing and will continue to progress toward the "Great Community" in which not only will racial, religious and social differences cease to have negative significance, but in which all of our people will feel themselves part of a community which makes them feel glad to be alive.

ZONING AND PLANNING COMMITTEE
Louis E. Levy, Chairman

List of cases handled by the West Mt. Airy Neighbors Zoning and Planning Committee during 1964:

ADDRESS AND REQUEST	WMAN ACTION	ZONING BOARD ACTION
Corner McCallum Street & Mt. Airy Avenue: Proposal to erect addition to Nursing Home.	Meeting by Committee with owners; Committee supported action by letter.	Variance granted.
S. E. Corner Emlen & Upsal Streets: Proposal to erect 49 family apartment building.	Meeting with neighbors followed by preparation of case in opposition to project.	Application withdrawn before hearing.
20 W. Allens Lane: Proposal to build one story addition to body shop.	Examination of site and opposition by letter.	Variance refused.
367 W. Hortter Street: (Glen Food Market) Proposal to build one story addition for storage purposes.	Examination of site; phone consultation with Committee; conference with Applicant's attorney; letter to Zoning Board approving the application.	Variance granted.
36 Nippon Street: Application for small optical business.	Meeting with owners at the site; discussion with Committee by phone; letter favoring application.	Variance granted.
443 W. Durham Street: Attempt to continue use of home as cooking source for catering service.	Meeting with neighbors with Harry Lore, Esq.; further meetings to prepare opposition to application. Appearance before Zoning Board in opposition.	Variance granted.

ADDRESS AND REQUEST	WMAN ACTION	ZONING BOARD ACTION
Interior Lot 6604 Wayne Avenue: Proposal to build one family home with private driveway.	Examination of plans; discussion by phone with Committee; letter approving application.	Variance refused.
S. E. Corner Emlen & Upsal Streets: (2nd time)	Meeting with neighbors followed by preparation of case in opposition to project. Appearance before Zoning Board in opposition.	Variance denied.

Other action by Zoning and Planning Committee:

Review of Zoning and Planning Summary Prepared by Germantown Community Council: sections of this report dealing with West Mt. Airy Neighbors' area were examined in detail and extensive changes were made in the report on the sections dealing with traffice. These changes were to clearly indicate that the Association disapproves of any effort to widen the streets in this area to carry more traffice through the area. Rather the Association supports efforts to build the necessary expressways to carry the traffice from the suburban areas where it originates around the West Mt. Airy Neighborhood to the center city where much of such traffic is headed.

Efforts to Upgrade Zoning at Wissahickon Avenue and Allens Lane from R-1 to R-2. Meeting with the neighbors on three separate occasions to discuss means to assist passage of ordinance. Discussion of proposed ordinance with Councilman Bellis. Assisted in preparation of ordinance. Submitted to City Planning Commission for its approval, which was forthcoming. Arranged for bill to be given to Mr. Bellis as an official West Mt. Airy Neighbors project.

Organized Sub-committee to Work with Germantown Community Council and the City Planning Commission to review the plan for the Northwest.

REAL ESTATE PRACTICES COMMITTEE

Edward Lavin, Chairman

Being chairman of the Real Estate Practices Committee during the past year has been almost a pleasure. While there have been incidents requiring our attention, by and large we have observed a high degree of stability in the local real estate market - characterized by a lack of panic, a relatively small turnover in homes, and what seemd to be a rising trend in values. We are witnessing the functioning of an open real estate market in a true sense, a market where housing is available to any buyer who seeks it, and where buyers, both white and Negro, have sought and found a market where there has been a growing incidence of property transfers from white to Negro to white, with the market being determined by the desirability of the real estate as the prime motivating consideration.

During the past year, "Don't Call Us - We'll Call You" forms were requested, executed and returned on five occasions, involving forty home owners and four brokers. We have continued to bring to the attention of real estate brokers "SOLD" signs which have been posted beyond the seven days permitted by City ordinance. The general cooperation of brokers in this respect has been good.

The generally good condition of our local real estate market results from many things: the tremendous efforts of the leadership and membership of West Mt. Airy Neighbors, the enlightened intelligence of all our neighbors, the unalterable desirability of West Mt. Airy itself as a place to live, and, to a very large measure, to the co-operation of the local real estate fraternity, about thirty brokers, representing most of those serving this area, who have agreed, voluntarily at our request, to restrain themselves from open solicitation for sales listings, the life blood of the real estate business. They have done this at some real sacrifice to themselves for our general welfare. In some instances they have been put at a disadvantage in relation to some outside brokers who have not signed our policy statement.

We have undertaken to control these outsiders, but we must do more, you must do more to show our appreciation to those businessmen who are cooperating so well with us. While we trust that most of you will be with us for a long time to come, some of you, for any of an infinite variety of reasons, will need the services of a real estate broker. PLEASE make your selection from one of those offices who have pledged to help us.*

We have under way a rather ambitious and exciting project which should prove most interesting to West Mt. Airy residents as well as the entire metropolitan community. With the encouragement of Matt Bullock, the driving leadership of Chairman Eugene Richardson ably assisted by Jack Guttentag and Bent Andresen, a committee has been formed whose function it will be to make a complete survey and analysis of all real estate transactions in West Mt. Airy for the past ten years. It is contemplated that this will be a continuing activity, keeping these records current, with periodic reports to the association. Findings will be made available to interested segments of the real estate and social fields. An IBM system is in the process of formation, for the purpose of making this vast amount of material readily useable. This will be made possible by the donation of IBM facilities, materials and professional services.

* Lists have been circulated to WMAN members, extra copies on request.

CITY AND PUBLIC SERVICES COMMITTEE

Richard P. Bansen, Chairman

During the past year, the City and Public Services Committee has worked diligently to raise the level of City and public services to the community.

In March, 1964, a member of the Committee attended hearings of the Public Utility Commission on three consecutive days, representing West Mt. Airy Neighbors and offering testimony in opposition to reductions in service on the bus and trolley lines that serve this area.

Later in the year, the Committee gathered community support for the City ordinance to prohibit parking of trucks in residential areas. This ordinance was subsequently made law and the City is now placing the signs which are necessary for the enforcement of the law. The Committee would like to know of areas where the community feels enforcement of this law is lax.

In keeping with the community's support of conservation and green open areas, the Committee urged Congressional support of the Conservation Fund Bill to expand the National Park Program.

A member of the Committee met with the Mt. Airy Playground Advisory Committee to help set up a playground program which would provide maximum services to the youth of the community.

Throughout the year the Committee has maintained contact with many of the public agencies, which serve the community, to assure that a high level of service is forthcoming. The Committee believes that maintainance of high standards of service is an important contribution to the community's pride in itself.

PROBLEM PROPERTIES COMMITTEE

Nathaniel R. Bowditch, Chairman

The principal activities during the past year can be divided into three areas. One subcommittee has been exploring with city officials what can be done with the Germantown Steam Plant. At this point, no definite conclusion has been finalized.

Another subcommittee composed of architects and city planners, under the direction of Mark Karlen, have been offering their professional services to a number of property owners on how to improve the appearance of their properties.

The third and last subcommittee was responsible for making the initial selection of commercial enterprises to be cited for the attractiveness of their store fronts at the Annual Meeting.

WEST SHARPNACK AREA CIVIC COUNCIL - WEST MT. AIRY NEIGHBORS JOINT COMMITTEE

Benson L. Dutton & Holgar Stub, Co-Chairmen

At the request of the West Sharpnack Area Civic Council, and with the support of Matt Bullock, a joint committee was formed to work on specific problems that called for strong action. Working with the Department of Licenses and Inspections, the 14th Precinct Police, the Juvenile Aid Division of the Police Department, the Land Utilization Office of L & I and Police Sanitation, this committee was able to make substantial progress in the areas of run-down properties, youth problems, undesirable business establishments and the development of a Tot-Lot.

Over the summer, L & I made a door to door survey of the area, issuing summonses to property owners where called for. Several vacant properties were properly boarded up, thus cutting down the temptation to vandals. Residents of the area streets continued a campaign for clean blocks and beautification of front lawns. One business establishment was closed on a zoning violation and by autumn a new, much more desirable business had opened at that location.

With the help of a youth group, the Gypsies, and with a generous monetary and equipment contribution from members of the West Mt. Airy Neighbors, a Tot Lot was partially completed over the summer. The response of the youngsters for whom the Tot-Lot was built was most gratifying.

It is hoped that this Joint Committee will continue to function in the future, expanding its service to the community.

SCHOOLS COMMITTEE

Ralph Bieber & Bennett Stalvey, Jr., Co-Chairmen

The Schools Committee was recently organized into three working sub-committees:

One sub-committee is working with the three local elementary schools in developing liaison and direct communication among the three, with the goal of being of service to the schools whenever and wherever the support of a strong community organization is needed.

The second group is making a detailed study of the secondary schools serving the area children. The sub-committee will be working with the Germantown Community Council's Schools Committee and other groups for the continuing improvement in the quality of education offered by the two junior highs and the high school.

The third sub-committee is made up of representatives to other educational groups throughout the city, such as the Citizens Committee on Public Education in Philadelphia, the Coordinating Council on School Integration, etc. This group also makes continuous studies on current on-going programs in the field of education and makes recommendations for public statements and testimony. This includes the Educational Home Rule Charter Commission, the Board of Education's Budget, etc.

MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

Robert D. Anderson, Chairman

The active membership of the West Mt. Airy Neighbors is at an all time high. We are now carrying on the rolls 674 families, of which over a dozen are courtesy members scattered across the country who have asked to be kept abreast of our activites.

101 new members joined in 1964; with 47 names dropped due to death, removal from the area and delinquency, a net gain of 54 members was made over our 1963 rolls.

It is interesting to note that many of the new members are new residents in the area, or residents who became aware of WMAN due to help received from various WMAN committees such as Zoning and Real Estate Practices.

In cooperation with the Executive Secretary, a system of quarterly billing and followup has proved effective to the point that members removed for nonpayment of dues has been greatly decreased: i.e. of 125 billed in June for the year June 1964-65, only two have been dropped for nonpayment.

In membership recruitments, a number of methods were used: the "Block Watchers", numbering 164, informed the central office of new residents who then received information about WMAN and were invited to join; there was a small direct mailing to a selected list of residents; and the personal approach to new residents and old alike was, and is, an ongoing event.

In 1965, the Membership Committee will be working actively at the planned area meetings.

The Committee feels there is a growing strong feeling of community life in West Mt. Airy, with the West Mt. Airy Neighbors as an important factor in it. It is significant that the membership of WMAN maintains itself so well in spite of the non-crisis aspect of our neighborhood.

PERSONNEL RESOURCES COMMITTEE

Doris W. Guttentag, Chairman

A current, on-going record is kept of the interest and talents of all members of the West Mt. Airy Neighbors. This is done by means of a questionnaire to all new members and a constant search by committee chairmen for people with special abilities. We are therefore able to draw on this talent pool for the variety of activities being undertaken by the West Mt. Airy Neighbors.

WOMENS' ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE
Lola J. Garth, Chairman

The committee was to be devoted to things women enjoy doing, as well as things involving women and children.

An enthusiastic group of ladies met and decided that one of the greatest needs was to know our neighbors and to share interests and activities through this friendship. With this in mind, an invitation, including a questionnaire on women's interests, was sent to attend a welcoming and planning tea to be held Sunday, April 19th at Summit Presbyterian Church. One hundred fifteen replies and questionnaires were received and a hundred women had tea and engaged enthusiastically in buzz sessions. It was plain that there was a need for get-together activities in West Mt. Airy and the ladies liked the idea. The tea was a success. Groups in bridge, gardening, discussion, music, crafts, activities with young children, trips to the World's Fair, New Hope and Longwood Gardens were set up. Most of them met regularly. We have hopes for others.

We are asked to assist other committees where the need for the "feminine touch" in a social, civic or advisory capacity arises. Because of varied requests for information, we find ourselves serving as a clearing house for disseminating information on existing services, groups, activities, or aiding in setting up activities of interest to women, youth and families.

Right now we are engaged in exploring possibilities for a fund raising activity which will involve the entire membership of West Mt. Airy Neighbors. A theater benefit met with approval, thus we are considering programs offered at the Wayne Theater and other theaters.

We, the members of the Womens' Activities Committee submit this report with all modesty and confess that working together as a group has been more a pleasure than a task. We wish to thank our President for his interest and encouragement, our Executive Secretary for her assistance and many members who aided us in pursuit of our work.

LIBRARY SERIES COMMITTEE
Doris Guttentag, Acting Chairman

After an unexpected setback in our programming, the committee decided to plan for a lecture series at the Lovett Memorial Branch of the Free Library of Philadelphia in the fall. Many stimulating ideas have been presented to the committee and an interesting program will be worked out. The general membership of West Mt. Airy Neighbors was given the opportunity to submit suggestions to the Library Series Committee.

TREASURER'S ANNUAL REPORT - WMAN

It is a pleasure to report that West Mt. Airy Neighbors, Inc. is solvent. At the end of 1964 we had $1658.26 which is about $150 more than we had at the beginning of the year.

Our 640 members paid dues of $4770.00 but our expenses amounted to $5250.00, so that without additional funds from other sources we would have operated at a loss of approximately $450. As compared to 1963, the cost of administration has increased by approximately $850.00. The largest portion of this increase represents additional compensation to our Executive Secretary whose job has grown from part time to one which requires her service full time to take care of the many details of the many faceted program of WMAN.

Since no other fund raising event was planned, such as the House Tours of prior years, we were obliged to appeal to our members and friends for additional contributions so that we could operate without a deficit. I am pleased that you responded so generously in an amount over $400.00 so that we are financially sound, and able effectively to continue our service to the community.

Respectfully submitted,

Daniel Cades, Treasurer

REMARKS BY LOUIS E. LEVY
President for 1965

I am touched and proud to have been selected by you as President of the West Mt. Airy Neighbors Association. Our last President, Matthew Bullock has brought to the association many new concepts of its role in the community. The ideas he has set forth, while not overlooking the original aims of the association, have established further goals to be achieved. These ideas will over the years spur us in our efforts to achieve a better neighborhood.

All of us who have served WMAN in the past year thank him for his efforts in the office of President and are glad to have served under him. His abilities and ideas will be enlisted in our service in the future.

The Nominating Committee has selected three men of excellent capabilities to serve as Vice Presidents in the coming year: Dr. Robert Anderson, Lewis Tanner Moore and David V. Randall. Two of these men have worked hard for WMAN since its inception, and the third has worked diligently since his arrival in West Mt. Airy. I am glad that such men have been chosen for these posts to share the burdens of the administration.

The annual meeting is a time to examine past performance and to look to the problems ahead. As you have heard, over the past years one of the original aims of the association, the stabilization of the neighborhood, has been achieved to a happy degree. As the area has approached this goal, there has arisen a new feeling of responsibility for and pride in the neighborhood. This spirit gives the association new vigor as it looks to the future. While considerable progress can be reported in this area, there are other areas in which much remains to be done. Among these areas in which I hope that much work will be done in the coming year are the following:

1. Improvement of the local schools and of the secondary schools to which our children go.

2. Work with the City Planning Commission in developing a plan for the Northwest section of the city which states that this area is and should remain a low density residential area devoted primarily to privately owned dwellings. City action should be based on such a concept.

3. Work with the proper authorities to develop a plan for traffic which shows official recognition of the fact that the area's traffic problems can only be solved by expressways which carry traffic around the area and not by widening residential roads to carry the traffic through the area.

4. The elimination of the abandoned steam plant buildings.

5. Continuation and expansion of the youth employment service and a program of youth recreation.

6. Further sprucing up of the railroad stations in the area.

7. An expanded area of social activities.

There are many other areas where the association might be active if it knew more clearly the needs of its members. To learn of these areas, to keep in closer touch with its members and to stimulate interest among those who live in the area but who haven't joined WMAN, a series of local meetings will be held in the coming year. At these meetings the past accomplishments and the future aims will be discussed. Then your officers hope to hear criticism and ideas that cannot adequately be voiced or discussed at a meeting as large as this. It is our hope that through these meetings the members and non-members in our area will learn of the efforts of the association and the association will become more responsive to the needs and desires of its members and will better serve them.

To accomplish our program the offices of the association must be staffed. It is dependent entirely on the voluntary services of its members. In the past many in the community have given freely of their services both lay and professional. It is impossible ever to adequately thank or honor those who have served. In the future many will be called on. It is hoped that they will serve with the same willingness to devote the endless hours necessary to achieve success. I would like to honor these people in advance. I know their jobs will be difficult, their hours long, and the immediate success frequently small, with recognition forgotten in the pressure of the moment. In spite of these obstacles, I ask all of you to serve when asked. Without your efforts there will be no accomplishment.

I am looking forward to the challenge and excitement of the coming year. With your help we will make some progress toward achieving a continually better neighborhood.

Dear Mr. Smith:

The booklet is wonderful! Several members of my Board of Directors have pounced on it with great joy and feel it says just the things we wanted to say about West Mt. Airy and the Neighbors. I am writing to Mrs. Price to offer our official congratulations.

I have no doubt that you will be receiving a substantial order for more copies; our new president, Dr. Robert D. Anderson, wants at least every member of our board to have one.

As for the New Orleans offer, my head is still swimming. The mid-winter drudgery which hits every office was lifted completely with the very exciting feeling that we can be of real help to other communities in the country. What a morale booster!

Sincerely,

Ruth Steele

THE COMMUNITY THAT NEEDED TO PLAY - an editorial

Once upon a time there was a community with lovely homes, pretty gardens, intelligent adults and alert children. But the community had one problem: some people were bored.

There was an art center which had excellent facilities for all sorts of cultural classes and programs. But some people had nebulous ideas about other kinds of things they might like to do.

The trouble was they couldn't get their ideas out of their heads and put them into effect, so the art center didn't know what these people really wanted.

A lot of children were bored too. Most of the time they stood about on street corners throwing soda bottles to see how many they could break.

This little story can have a happy ending -- no, not an ending -- more of a beginning.

Why doesn't WMAN join forces with Allens Lane Art Center? Why can't the art center start being a community center as well, with activities for all?

The facilities are there -- all we need is an expanded program. How about a rock 'n roll club, a ski club, a garden club, gourmet cooking classes?

Why not give the little story a happy ending and make another happy first for this community?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The editor hopes that readers will respond to the foregoing editorial via our new "Letters to the Editor" column. Letter writers must sign name and address in order to have letters published, but names will be withheld on request.

Send your letters to Mrs. Oscar Bogoslaw, WMANewsletter Editor, 503 Carpenter Lane.

HAVE WE BECOME TOO COMPLACENT?

To the Editor:

WMAN is now nine years old and our community has gained national recognition for its work in the areas of integration, zoning, housing and schools.

Has it gone to our heads?

Are we still the leading community association in Philadelphia?

I question what we, as a community, are doing to revitalize the Mt.Airy business area (look what they've done in Chestnut Hill!); what are we doing to alleviate overcrowding in our schools and to improve the quality of education(are our children getting the education we want them to?).

Isn't it about time we all took steps to make this the community we will continue to be proud of?

Jerome Balka, Esq.

WHAT DO WE DO WITH OUR MONEY?

To the Editor:

I was interested to note in the Annual Report that WMAN has a balance of $1519.0 in the bank.

While most civic organizations struggle along on a shoestring, that makes us comparatively well fixed and we have many yet untapped means to raise funds.

My question is, how do we use this money?

I realize that a lot goes for office and personnel expenses, but beyond that, couldn't we contribute a little to the needs of this community -- a place for kids to get together instead of hanging around corners -- for refurbishing of the Germantown Avenue shopping area -- for social activities to help us all know each other better?

Name withheld on request

CANDIDATES TO ATTEND OPEN MEETING

A WMAN open Board meeting, the second this year, will be held on Monday, May 8 at 8 PM at the Unitarian Church of Germantown, 6511 Lincoln Drive (at Wayne Avenue).

With the May primaries coming up, WMAN has invited a representative of the League of Women Voters to discuss the constitutional convention questions which will appear on the ballot.

Everyone is urged to come and meet the four Democratic and one Republican candidates for the 8th Councilmanic District seat.

David Randall, former WMAN Schools Committee Chairman, will discuss both sides of the controversial School Borrowing Power question. Prior to the presentation, there will be a regular Board of Directors meeting at which all members may join the discussions.

OUR SCHOOLS ARE IN TROUBLE: WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

WMAN is co-sponsoring a conference at Germantown High School on Monday, May 15th at which Richardson Dilworth, President of the Board of Education will be the guest speaker. Watch your mail for an announcement of details. Meantime, mark your calendars for this important event.

WMAN GOES TO THE FAIR

The Annual Vernon Fair, highlight of Germantown Week, will run from May 15 to May 20. WMAN, a long-time member of the Germantown Community Council, will have an educational booth on Friday and Saturday, May 19 and 20, telling the WMAN story through pictures, posters and give-away pamphlets.

Volunteers willing to man the booth for 2 or 3 hour shifts anytime from 10 AM to 6 PM both days are asked to call Mrs. Nicki Saltz, CH 7-1523. You are needed.

EMPLOYMENT BUREAU EXPANDS

Mrs. Jeanette deVault, manager of the WMAN Youth Employment Bureau, has announced plans to increase the scope of the services offered to area residents. Many calls have come in for daytime baby sitters and since many of the girls on the Bureau's rolls are in school, a call is going out for older women to fill these jobs. If you are interested or know anyone who wants to do day-time baby-sitting, please call Mrs. deVault at CH 7-8402.

RESIDENTS ALERTED TO FRAUDULENT PRACTICES

With spring gardening in full swing, neighbors are urged to be on the lookout for gardenrs who offer to do long-term work but demand large deposits and never complete the jobs.

Be sure you know just what you are contracting for and use good judgement in payment arrangements. Several residents have called the office to inform WMAN of this seasonal racket.

14TH POLICE COVERAGE INCREASED TO SERVE ALL WEST MT. AIRY

In order to insure adequate Police protection of the entire area, West Mt. Airy Neighbors requested that Commissioner Edward Bell redraw the boundaries of the 14th and 5th Police Districts so that those residents living west of Wissahickon Avenue could be served by the 14th.

In announcing the boundary changes Captain Charles Kirk, Commanding Officer of the 14th, told WMAN that using the natural boundary of Wissahickon Creek rather than Wissahickon Avenue makes sense, since the men of the 5th District, headquartered in Roxborough were responsible for an area out of touch with the rest of their District.

All residents living in the area between Wissahickon Avenue and Wissahickon Creek should, from now on, call on the men of the 14th Police District when they are needed.

HELP WANTED

The Department of Recreation, in answer to pleas from the community for additional supervisory personnel at the Sedgwick Playground, informed WMAN that another Group Leader would be assigned to the Playground as soon as one could be found. At present no one has applied for this Civil Service position with the City.

WMAN asks its members to notify anyone interested in recreational work to call the office, CH 2-1196, for complete information on job description, salary range, requirements, type of examination given, etc.

AREA MEETING DRAWS CROWD

The second area meeting of 1967 took place on Monday, April 17 at Henry School and drew a good crowd in spite of inclement weather. Some 100 residents of Sedgwick, Carpenter and Westview, between McCallum and Wayne discussed area problems as follows:

Real Estate Practices: McIlhinney has been soliciting by postcard on west Sedgwick Street from the 400 to the 800 block. Indignant residents were told by Ruth Steele not to disregard such postacrds, but to call the office for a petition to circulate on the blocks. This petition, sent to the offending broker, warns him not to repeat his approach. If he does WMAN could take him before the State Real Estate Commission for acting in bad faith.

Traffic: A traffic study will be requested of the Streets Department for the area of Greene and Carpenter Lane, with emphasis on increased traffic during arrival and dismissal from Henry School.

Police Sanitation: Officer James Edwards stated: 1) you can call his department if homeowners are uncooperative about keeping their premises clean; 2) you can call if a car is left on the street but is not technically an abandoned vehicle (i.e. it has current plates and appears operable); 3) you can call Police if you know the owner of a dog who refuses to keep the dog on a leash or in a yard. As a last resort you can pen up the dog and call the SPCA who will take the animal and hold it until the owner claims it and pays a fine.

PTC: Mr. F. Berdan, Jr. of the Planning Department said that all trolleys in the city will be phased out within 10 years and be replaced by diesel buses, since buses are more economical and trolleys are no longer being manufactured. (He gave standard PTC stories about improvements having to be paid for in increased fares eventually.)

Carpenters Woods: Mr. Hyman Carroll, Park Commission engineer said we are not getting full use out of the woods. There is a bridle path that connects with the Wissahickon, a picnic area between two bridges which span the small creek, and a now defunct bird snactuary which could be revived. He said the Commission would have the Woods cleaned up immediately and that in the future WMAN sponsored cleanup drives and activities would probably get Commission approval since we are most concerned with the area.

Editor's note:

If you have similar concerns or other problems in your area of West Mt. Airy, please call Mrs. Steele at CH 2-1196 to set up a meeting in your section. This is your organization, use it!

WHAT YOU GET FOR YOUR DUES

Every day, problems like the following flow over the desk of Executive Director, Mrs. Ruth Steele. To solve them, she must contact the right people in the city departments, which takes a lot of writing and phone calling.

Undramatic housekeeping like this, going on constantly and almost unnoticed, is a large part of how WMAN works to keep this the desirable neighborhood it is -- just some of the dividends you get for supporting WMAN through your membership dues.

Here is a typical month's work in the area of City and Public Services:

Secured a representative to the Playground Advisory Committee to speak for WMAN on future policy and programming for neighborhood youngsters;
Reported 20 abandoned cars, half of which have been removed; (please continue to report cars to the office and tell Mrs. Steele if they are removed.)
Requested Clean Sweeps from the Department of Streets for:
1000 block Westview Street
1000 block W. Upsal Street
500 block Pelham Road;
Contacted owner of a rental property going downhill to ask for clean-up. Got immediate cooperation;
Processed complaint to Sanitation Department about 4 AM garbage collection -- collector was informed not to repeat such early collections.
Requested Police Sanitation Unit inspections of:
6600 block Germantown Avenue -- absentee owners warned to clean up
7000 block Lincoln Drive - two home owners given warnings on trash and garbage disposal unit block Carpenter Lane - encouraged owners to remove car parked on lawn 6900 block Greene Street - issued summons to property owner for littering
6700 block Emlen Street - improper trash disposal during move out of Julia Gibson School from Emlen Arms building - since cleaned up Requested from the Department of Streets these signs:
NO TRUCK PARKING 6 PM to 6 AM the length of Quincy Street - approved
NO PARKING HERE TO CORNER at Allens Lane and Cresheim Road - approved and put up
TWO HOUR PARKING at Lincoln Drive and Mt. Pleasant Avenue - no action yet Requested from Streets Department repair of these signs:
STOP sign at Cresheim and Sedgwick Street - recemented upright - completed
STOP sign at Pelham Road and Emlen Street - straightened - completed Requested Licenses and Inspections Department investigation of:
146 W. Sharpnack - investigation begun
AAMCO garage, Lincoln Drive and Mt. Pleasant Avenue - investigation begun Requested Health Department help on rats in vacant lot on Lincoln Drive south of three gas stations at Mt. Pleasant - lot baited
Protested Sunday opening of Laundromat at Emlen and Sharpnack Sts. - still in negotiative stage
Requested opening of clogged drain at Pelham and Quincy - no action
Asked Pennsylvania Railroad to replace cut service on 5:25 express from town Requested zoning status on each house in 200 block W. Hortter Street

NEWSLETTER

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Newsletter editor is seeking lively, concerned - even controversial - comment on WMAN matters, like those below which came in during the last month.

Name and address must be included, but will be withheld on request. Anyone with an axe to grind in invited to write to:

Editor, WMANewsletter
503 Carpenter Lane
Philadelphia, Pa. 19119.

DO WITH WHAT MONEY?

To the Editor:

In the last issue of the Newsletter there was a letter to the editor asking why we could not use what appeared to be a great surplus of funds in the treasury. It happens, as a matter of fact, that during the month in question we had the delightful occurrence of high membership dues income and low operating expenses. If the writer were to study the WMAN books, it would be clear that over the course of a year our income only slightly exceeds our expenses, leaving a small but necessary foundation.

OLD EDITOR LIKES NEW NEWSLETTER

To the Editor:

Last month's Newsletter was excellent.

I was impressed with the new "Letters to the Editor" column, and with the Editorial. I especially like the new way you did the City Services report.

GERMANTOWN TODAY

To the Editor:

I heard it remarked that the failure of the Vernon Fair and other features of Germantown Week was due to the fact the old-time Germantown "aristocrats" have moved away, and the new population of working people simply do not have the time or the interest.

This being the case, does Germantown give up its effort to promote civic pride and feel that it has "gone down"?

I hope not. I hope that the effort will simply be re-geared to meet the needs and interests of Germantown's new community structure.

Mrs. Sadie Norcross

REAL ESTATE SURVEY GETS FUND -- AT LAST

The important survey on real estate patterns and values in West Mt. Airy, started in 1965, will be completed and tabulated thanks to a grant of $1500 from the Philadelphia Foundation and a private donation of $2000 from Mrs. Edith Stix Wasserman.

The survey, headed by Dr. Jack Guttentag, University of Pennsylvania professor of finance, and staffed by Eugene Richardson and Bent Andresen, will cover the years 1951 through 1966 and is expected to be of great sociological value. It will cover different areas of West Mt. Airy and compare our neighborhood with patterns elsewhere in the city.

U of P facilities and WMAN personnel are being used to gather, program, tabulate and computerize the data.

WMAN READIES TO MEET WITH ALLENS LANE ART CENTER

Following the editorial in last month's Newsletter urging a closer relationship between ALAC and WMAN, it was voted, at the April Board meeting, to have the two groups meet and plan cooperative ventures and activities. Volunteers were requested for WMAN's committee and about nine signed up at the open meeting.

Dr. Robert Anderson, WMAN president, will confer with the ALAC board, and when the ALAC board has chosen representatives there will be a conference, possibly over the summer. Allens Lane president Lillian Weger has already said she is "very enthusiastic" about the prospects.

SEDGWICK PLAYGROUND NEEDS HELP

There are 30 boys in the Northwest Division, Department of Recreation Baseball League. They have 10 uniforms. To get the other 20 players uniformed, $200 is needed. Can you contribute?

WMAN is become increasingly concerned about the needs of our area youth, and this is just one way we would like to help them. The Sedgwick Advisory Committee, of which WMAN is a member, has been re-activated and is working to extend its scope of activities for youngsters, but it needs community help.

Checks for the uniforms may be made out to Mr. Marion Taylor and sent to the WMAN office, 7139 Cresheim Road, Philadelphia, Pa. 19119.

PLAYGROUND (continued)

A request in last month's Newsletter for a Group Leader received one answer from a part-time worker, but a full-time worker is still needed. All those interested should see Mr. Louis Kushner, Leader-in-Charge at the Playground, Germantown Ave. & Sedgwick.

LAUNDROMAT APPLICATION DOWN THE DRAIN -- by Nicki Saltz

The Zoning Boardhearing room was nearly empty. As each case was called, three people would go forward - the applicant for the zoning change, his attorney, and maybe one protestant.

When the case for a late-hour laundromat at Lincoln Drive & Mt. Pleasant Avenue was called, almost the entire back half of the courtroom stood up!

Led by Councilmanic candidate, attorney Herbert Olivieri and local committeeman Joseph Vesci, and supported by WMANer Ed Sawin, 12 West Mt. Airy citizens (including me) declared passionately that they did not want a noisy, unattended facility spouting hot air and lint through the roof, and attracting drunks and vagrants.

The applicant, shaken and astonished by the protest, which he did not expect, said he knew our neighborhood "slightly". If he thought West Mt. Airy would accept a change second only to a taproom in its power to downgrade a neighborhood, he doesn't know our neighborhood at all!

The application was refused.

SEMINAR SCHEDULED

For the fourth consecutive year, WMAN has been asked to participate in the "Rearing Children of Good Will" workshop sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. In the past, our portion of the seminar was held in Mt. Airy homes, but this year we have been asked to come to their lovely estate in Radnor in order to have more time to meet with the participants, who come from all over the eastern coast.

Twelve women from WMAN are invited to join the group, telling about their lives in West Mt. Airy. Anyone interested should call Ruth Steele at the office, CH 2-1196.

CROWD TURNS OUT FOR WMAN OPEN MEETING

It was a cold, wet night, but about 150 people braved the weather to attend the open board and political meeting on Monday May 8, at the Unitarian Church of Germantown.

All of the invited speakers came -- the councilmanic candidates, David Randall of WMAN and Mrs. Richard Solo of the League of Women Voters -- and all commented on the wonderful turnout. The only problem was that time ran out before the questions did, causing complaints from the floor.

WMAN is planning to give the public more meetings acquainting them with political questions and candidates in the future, in view of the response.

WMAN FAME STILL SPREADS

A woman in New Canaan, Conn., asked Ruth Steele to send her information about West Mt. Airy Neighbors and how we went about achieving stability in our open-housing community. She was referred to the office by her sister, a local resident and WMANer.

Louis Levy, former president of WMAN, addressed a civic group in the Tioga section of the city, the group having been organized by the local school principal and a clergyman. He told them how WMAN functions and how they could begin to meet some of their problems. He reported that a large part of the audience was made up of teachers who will be able to put many ideas into direct action through contact with their pupil

THANKS EXTENDED

Nicki Saltz, WMAN Publicity Chairman, wishes to thank the cooperative WMANers who offered to man our booth at the ill-fated Vernon Fair. She is going to use the posters and other material from that Fair for our booth at the Henry Fair which will be held on Saturday, June 3 from 12 Noon to 7 PM. All who are interested in working any of the 1 to 2 hour shifts may call Nicki at CH 7-1523.

GERMANTOWN HIGH CONFERENCE

The conference on education held at Germantown High on May 15 lost some of its appeal and attendance when Richardson Dilworth, featured speaker, cancelled his appearance. He was replaced by Graham Finney and the Rev. Henry Nichols.

NEED FOR MORE SITTERS

Mrs. Jeanette DeVault, head of the Youth Employment Service, has had one response to last month's call for mature women to do daytime baby sitting. Any others interested should call her at CH 7-8402.

CITY SERVICES HANDLED DURING MONTH

Walter Bell and Co., Emlen and Co., and LaZar Associates all removed SOLD signs immediately after being notified by WMAN that their signs had remained up beyond the seven day legal limit.

Pressure is being maintained on city departments re the property at 502 Westview, in hopes of affecting an improvement in the conditions of the proprty. The problem is that of dealing with an absentee owner. The struggle appears to be a long-term one, but WMAN is determined to see it through.

Police Sanitation Officer James Edwards has been hard at work in West Mt. Airy:

1. He got assurance that the yard of Eldon Press on Carpenter Lane would be kept free of debris.
2. He obtained the cooperation of Sydney's market, also on Carpenter Lane, regarding the storage and disposal of drinks from a vending machine on the sidewalk. Cans will be used instead of bottles and the owner will keep the sidewalk clean.

3. He investigated complaints from residents about properties in the 200 block of West Gorgas Lane and the Germantown Avenue - Phil-Ellena Street intersection. No violations were found.

The Streets Department unclogged sewers along Quincy Street, from Pelham to Phil-Ellena.

NOTE: Please don't hesitate to call the office (CH 2-1196) if you think there might be a violation, whether L&I or Police Sanitation or whatever. These can all be checked out and if there is no violation, so much the better.

Seven abandoned cars were reported and removed during the last month. Keep reporting them to the office with as much detailed information as possible.

February Event Is Foreign Students' Weekend

The second monthly event commemorating WMAN's 10th Anniversary is our Foreign Students' Weekend coming up on Feb. 24-25. To date we have 52 students being hosted by 40 families, but by the time you read this the numbers will be higher. The Folk Fete is to be held at the Pennsylvania School for the Deaf on Saturday evening, the 24th from 8 - 11 PM. It promises to be a big bash with Sid Dichter leading folk dancing.

All West Mt. Airy residents are welcome, whether or not they are host families. Flyers inviting school children and their families have been sent home from Henry and Houston. Please come out and bring the kids for a really groovy evening.

West Mt. Airy Neighbors' Junior and Cadette Girl Scouts will serve as hostesses.

"Hoi Polloi" Flounders Without Help

The "Hoi Polloi", a coffe house co-sponsored by WMAN and Summit Presbyterian Church, and held at the church every Saturday evening from 8 til 11 PM has been doing a thriving business except for the night recently when all the kids had to be turned away because there were no chaperones.

All they need to open the "Hoi Polloi" are two adults (husband and wife or singles) to be there. All it takes is three hours of your time on one Saturday night. It's a swingin' place -- you'd probably have a great time and maybe even learn something. How about it, all of you out there in WMANville? Call the WMAN office, CH 2-1196, and sign up for one evening.

Adult Group Leadership Needed

Adult leaders are needed at the YWCA at 5820 Germantown Avenue for an informal social hour of games and dancing to be held Tuesdays and Thursdays from 2 to 5 PM. Both boys and girls are in the group.

Call GE 8-6266 or LO 8-3392 - Mrs. Paulette Johnson, Council on Volunteers

Another-Job-Well-Done Department

Ruth Steele, Executive Director of WMAN has done it again. Here is a list of city services she has helped make possible:

1. Sewer at Pelham and Quincy cleaned and repairs investigated
2. NO TRUCK PARKING FROM 6 PM TO 6 AM signs erected at:
   Emlen and Mt. Airy Ave.
   200 block W. Gorgas Lane
   500 and 600 blocks of Carpenter Lane
3. Overhead street light repaired promptly at Carpenter Lane and Mower
4. Park plot at intersection of Lincoln Dr., Emlen and Ellet Sts. mowed and weeded
5. Pot holes repaired at Carpenter Lane Station. Now pressure is being brought for repair of safety hand rails there
6. Abandoned car removed from Mt. Airy Ave. west of Wissahickon (Many more abandoned cars reported to police, but not yet towed away)
7. Rural Lane repaved its entire length from Allens Lane north to end
8. A SOLD sign up beyond the seven day legal limit removed by broker when requested to by WMAN
9. Numberous houskeeping complaints handled by Police Sanitation Unit with report of good compliance and correction by property owners
10. Many complaints have been lodged with the Department of Sanitation on garbage pickup. There has been some spotty improvement, but if you continue to have any problems, continue to report them.

Community Problem is Solved

The WMAN office received reports of trouble developing at the corner of Mt. Pleasant and Germantown Avenues when students from Leeds Jr. High left buses to transfer to #23 trolleys on their way home. Students had been terrorizing shopkeepers by invading places of business, taking merchandies and making a general nuisance of themselves.

WMAN brought together the cooperative efforts of the 14th Police District and the adminstration of Leeds Jr. High. Captain Wong assigned a red car to the intersection during the hours of heavy student traffic and Mrs. Taylor, Vice Principal of Leeds offered complete cooperation. She reported that she would increase student training about the use and abuse of public and private property.

Four days after the original report, conditions were reported immensely improved with no trouble of any kind. When everyone involved cooperates, problems of this sort can be solved.

What's On Your Mind?

Many people call Ruth Steele at the WMAN office to tell her of their ideas, problems, etc. Perhaps we should have an opinion column in the Newsletter so these views can be aired by WMANers and you would know how other people feel about things and what matters to them. Pros and cons on having this column will be very welcome. Please let your editor know. (Gaby Bogoslaw, 503 Carpenter Lane)

Girl Scouts Forge Ahead

All three WMAN sponsored irl Scout troops now have leaders and assistants and are functioning very well. WMANers Mrs. Alex Hersh and Mrs. Joseph Maher work with Cadettes (Jr. Highers), while Mrs. Frank Renzetti leads the Juniors and Mrs. David Dennison is our new Brownie leader.

Zoning Cases Reported

WMAN supported the application for zoning permit to build Houston's new library, and the application was approved.

For some time, WMAN has been trying to have passed by City Council a bill upgrading the zoning for the area bounded by Fairmount Park on the west and north, McCallum Street on the east and N. Mt. Pleasant Avenue on the south. Twice such a bill died in committee. Jerry Balka, WMAN Vice President, has asked Councilman David Cohen to introduce the measure again and Mr. Cohen is planning to do so.

The Upsal School for the Blind at 220 W. Upsal St. has been planning to have a center for rehabilitation where students would live - such facility to be built in West Philadelphia. In the meantime, they desired a variance allowing students to live in the Upsal Street building temporarily. WMAN did not oppose this as a temporary measure but did indicate that it did not want this kind of institutional expansion to become a precedent in a primarily residential neighborhood.

The Zoning Committee has been doing an excellent job because each of the 10 area chairmen is working on those cases within his boundaires without fail. However, to help them keep up the good work, WMANers are urged to notify WMAN whenever a yellow zoning notice is seen posted on a property in the neighborhood. Mrs. Steele will see that the case gets to the proper area chairman. Just call the office CH 2 - 1196

7139 Cresheim Road, Phila. Pa. 19119 CH 2-1196 Vol. 10 Number 2

EDITORIAL

It would be superfluous to go into the many advantages of living in West Mt. Airy. However, one of the nicest features is the great number of small shopping areas which enhance the smalltown atmosphere and add convenience to our daily lives.

Unfortunately, most of these areas have been allowed to go to pot by their owners and tenants to the extent that many stores are empty and those that are open for business (with a few bright exceptions) are dreary and unappetizing with the result that many neighborhood residents are put off and few outsiders take the trouble to come. It is a viscious cycle: there is little business so shopkeepers are discouraged from making improvements and because of the dreariness, prospective customers are discouraged. It is a sad picture.

But how could it be if WMAN started a planning committee dedicated to long-range planning for business? A committee whose job it would be to help the little shopping areas to be as attractive as possible, to encourage more businessmen to move into vacant stores, or to convert properties back to the homes most once were.

If things would be planned instead of haphazard, these small shops could really enhance the neighborhood instead of being a blight on it. It would take a great deal of hard work and a strong committee, but it could be done and it would be well worth the effort.

What do you say WMANers? It's your decision. Please let your editor know what your views are on this subject. Write to the WMAN office c/o Newsletter Editor.

Good Neighbor Sunday

A fantastic plan for a WMAN membership drive is going into effect on Sunday, May 5. It involves 2 hours of time and lots of volunteers who will meet at a central location, pick up house lists (each recruiter having 1 or 2 blocks), membership forms, etc, drive or be driven to assigned blocks, solicit for membership and return to the central location for refreshments.

The purpose of the drive is to bring the number of WMAN members to at least 1000. This is the best membership idea WMAN has ever had and it will work -- provided everyone gets involved. Please fill out the 1st coupon in the coupon book just mailed you and give 2 hours of your time.

Watch for more details which will be forthcoming!

Shedd to be Special Guest

Dr. Mark R. Shedd will be the special guest speaker at WMAN's Annual Meeting on Tuesday April 16th at 8 P.M. at the Houston School.

A special WMAN 10th Birthday Party and informal reception will be held in the large gym following the meeting in the auditorium.

Dr. Shedd was to have spoken on March 21st, but this engagement was postponed when it was learned that he had four speaking appearances within one week in this area.

More Involvement, Less Work

WMAN's new approach to getting more people involved in projects on a short term basis is being done through the new coupon book which you have all received in the mail. This is the first in an annual series of coupon books which will allow members to take part in activities of their choice for one calendar year. The next - year you can sign up for something else.

Mail your coupons in now. Remember, the more people that sign up the less work there is for each to do.

WMAN School News: by Alexander Hersh, Chairman, Schools Committee

In a recent meeting with a number of persons from West Mt. Airy, Dr. Bernard Kelner, hard-working District 6 Superintendent referred to our area as having among the most knowledgable citizens in the city concerning school matters. Seeking to maintain this image the WMANewsletter will each month bring to members' attention issues-in-education on the premise that an enlightened community will support attainment of quality integrated schools...

Did you know that HB617 was to come before the House in Harrisburg soon? A very important bill, it calls for the minimum age of 1st grade admission to be raised from 5.7 years to 6 years. According to the Delaware Valley Association for Nursery and Kindergarten Education which supports the bill, it would eliminate problems of readiness for large numbers of beginning students. Let us know how you feel about the bill, and let your representative in Harrisburg be guided by your opinion...

Recently a group of Neighbors visited Roosevelt Junior High at the invitation of Mr. Sid Bosniak, the school's energetic principal. The group was most impressed with the many fine things happening there, and with this summer's scheduled total renovation, Roosevelt will be a most handsome and dynamic school with no more problems than most Junior Highs of comparable size in the city...

A major concern of all citizens should be the overcrowded conditions of our schools. Locally, Mrs. Chernock and Miss Gentel are doing most admirable jobs under difficult conditions. WMAN and other community groups have been actively exploring with principals and administrators both immediate and long-range plans for dealing with the problems brought by overcrowding. Hopefully, more about this next month...

As you know from the news coverage, politics, in the form of TATE/D'ORTONA - - DILWORTH/SHEDD positions led to an impasse on the scheduled Simon Gratz High extension. Though we are not directly involved we voted with the Germantown Community Council to support the DILWORTH/SHEDD position. Politics inevitably does enter every phase of life, but we must expect -- even demand that Dilworth and Shedd be given full opportunity to re-build our depleted school system by maintaining the elegant momentum they have gathered in less than a year...

Principals in all of the local schools, we're glad to say, have "open door" policies. Get to know them and their schools -- be informed -- learn for yourselves what all of the currently used terms mean, "K-4", "middle school", "cycle", "magnet" etc. Arrange a visit by calling a school - or we can arrange tours for groups if you call us...

All will be interested to know that WMAN is represented on the Pickett Middle School Advisory Committee, the Northwest High Site Review Committee and will be represented on the soon-to-be-established Northwest Middle School Ad Hoc Committee. Reports of activities and developments of these committees will be made in future issues of the Newsletter.

Across Community Camp

SPONSORS:	Wistar Neighborhood Council, West Mt. Airy Neighbors, West Side Community Council, East Mt. Airy Neighbors, Chestnut Hill Community Association.	DATES:	July 8-26
		PLACE:	Chestnut Hill Academy
		TIME:	9 a.m. - noon

Across Community Camp will be a creative-fun camp for 125 pre-first grade children, drawn equally from the sponsoring communities. Activities will include music, arts and crafts, stories, dance, nature study and one or two excursions related to the life of the camp. The staff will be comprised of group leaders and adult and youth assistants also drawn from sponsoring communities. Special resource teams will work with the groups. Groups will be limited to a maximum of twenty children. Children must be four year old by July 1, 1968 to qualify for enrollment.

Five Dollar fee. Contributions will be accepted for curriculum materials, transportation for trips, supplies and refreshments.

Enrollment in Across Community Camp will be on a FIRST COME basis. The deadline for enrollment will be June 15.

Let a neighbor know about the camp, if she has a small child.

The Camp is looking for teenage assistants (grades 8 - 12) as well as group leaders and adult assistants.

Anyone interested in enrolling a child, applying for a position, or just further information should call Ruth Steele at the WMAN office, CH 2-1196. She has application forms waiting for you.

WMAN as Escrow Agent

West Mt. Airy Neighbors is holding an escrow account for the tenants at 6802 Quincy. This is being done in cooperation with the Neighborhood Renewal Section of the Department of Licenses and Inspections.

According to law, when a building is declared unfit for human habitation, the tenants can withhold rent until the landlord or his agent makes the needed repairs.

The agent is Moreschi and he has already begun to make repairs to 6802.

City Services (or How Come You're Always So Busy, Ruth?)

Three SOLD signs came down immediately after realtors were told by WMAN that the signs had been up beyond the legal seven day limit.

Four abandoned cars were removed by the Police Department.

There was a Clean Sweep of Mt. Pleasant Avenue from Germantown Avenue to Cresheim, making those residents very happy.

At the request of neighbors, a misused public litter basket was removed. (Ed. Note: Public litter baskets are for trash -- NOT garbage.)

Vacant house at Wayne and Carpenter under continuing investigation by L & I.

502 Westview Street: THE GHOST HOUSE OF WEST MT. AIRY. On March 12 an administrative hearing was held by L & I. That department recommended the house NOT be demolished but that L & I, acting under the new Public Nuisance Law, be granted a go ahead to begin massive repairs to the property and place liens against the owner. Watch for further developments.

Constitutional Convention Report by Delegate: Mercer Tate

Pennsylvania's Constitutional Convention successfully concluded its labors on Feb. 29, 1968. Five ballot questions will be placed before the voters on April 23rd, on the subject of the Judiciary, Local Government, State Debt, State Budgets, State Auditing, Size of the General Assembly and Method of Reapportioning the General Assembly.

There seems to be general agreement that the product of the Convention is, on the whole, progressivee and a definite step forward and that if adopted the recommendations will serve Pennsylvania well for many decades. The best work of the Convention seems to be in the areas of Local Government, State Debt and some features of the Judiciary.

Your Board of Directors approved a resolution recommending a YES Vote on all five questions regarding the Constitution at its meeting on March 11, 1968. Anybody wishing further details or a copy of the text of the Convention's proposals should contact A Modern Constitution for Pennsylvania, Inc. 240 N. 3rd St. Harrisburg, Pa., or Mercer Tate, WMAN Board member, who was a delegate to the Convention. CH 8-0581.

Stop Real Estate Solicitation

At the present two petitions are being circulated to get signatures of people who have received cards from brokers. We in West Mt. Airy don't have as many problems with real estate solicitation as do some areas, but we must continue to be on the lookout for post cards and flyers from brokers and report any to the WMAN office.

Speakers Bureau Discusses Housing

WMAN Board members, John Walheim and Fred Gaines, spoke at a Glenside church on the broad topic of housing. John Walheim, as attorney, discussed the legal aspects of the recently expanded city and state housing laws. Fred Gaines, local broker, was a member of a panel discussing real estate practices.

News from the Girl Scouts

The Brownies visited the Junior Troop last week as part of the celebration of Girl Scout Week, to give them an opportunity to see what the future holds for Brownies.

The Juniors are involved in a project called Operation Bootstrap to collect usable outer CAMP clothing for less fortunate Girl Scouts. Anyone in WMAN who can donate boots, raincoats, blankets, etc. in useable condition can take them to leader Mrs. Carol Renzetti, 55 W. Gowen Avenue or call the WMAN office, CH 2-1196 for pick-up. This drive will be on from April 1 to June 1.

The Cadeete Troop went on a weekend camping trip to Girl Scout Camp Laughing Waters. Both Juniors and Cadettes worked like beavers during the cookie sale and brought in healthy profits for their troops - money which will be used for camping trips, excursions, and the purchase of troop camping equipment.

Area Meeting Held

Over 60 neighbors attended an area meeting on March 14 jointly sponsored by the West Shaprnack Street Civic Association and the West Mt. Airy Neighbors. The blocks invited to the meeting were Sharpnack, Good, Weaver, Cherokee and Berdan Streets.

Representatives of L & I, Police and Sanitation were on hand to hear various local problems discussed. The reaction was good - the feeling prevailed that something would be done about the immediate problems.

Citizens Community Advisory Council Organized

David Cohen, District 8 City Councilman, has organized a Citizens Community Advisory Council for the purpose of formulating positions based on representative feelings in his constituency. Ruth Steele, Executive Director of WMAN, has been asked to represent this community.

The group has met already and will meet on a monthly basis. The purpose of this non-partisan group is two fold: to discover the needs of the neighborhoods in the Councilman's district and to get community reaction to new ideas.

Hoi Polloi Thriving

Since the last Newsletter a dozen pairs of chaperones for Saturday nights at the Hoi Polloi, the coffee house sponsored by Summit Church and WMAN, have volunteered their services.

Your Editor has become a member of the coffee house Board which, incidentally, is made up of adults and teenagers - all groovy.

The Hoi Polloi is so successful that it is shortly to move to a larger room within the church.

You can still sign up for an evening of chaperoning by checking off the Youth Services coupon in your coupon book and mailing it to the office.

International Relations Improve in West Mt. Airy

WMAN's Foreign Students' Weekend was a huge success. An excellent idea was Chairman Mrs. Frances Sampson's polling of both students and host families. The most prevelant suggestion forthcoming was that in the future either larger quarters or separate activities be planned for the younger set whose heavy attendance tended to dominate the dance floor.

Reactions from the students were unanimously enthusiastic about the opportunity to live with an American family for a weekend. Hope was expressed that this sort of international goodwill program could become a yearly event.

YES -- OUR KIDS NEED JOBS

There are more kids than ever available for part-time employment through WMAN's Youth Employment Service (for baby sitting, odd jobs, etc) Please post the enclosed business card near the phone and take advantage of this service.

PICNIC DRAWS 200 TO MEADOW

Saturday, June 22, was a perfect picnic day, attested to by the more than 200 who came to Monastery Meadow in Fairmount Park for our June Anniversary Event.

WMAN's marvelous volunteer pastry chefs provided a huge assortment of cakes and cookies for dessert, and the sodas packed in an ice filled trailer offered a double treat on a hot day. (how many kids can fill a U-Haul-It? -- You'd be surprised!)

TESTIMONY GIVEN ON AIR POLLUTION BILL

Ruth Steele, Executive Director, presented testimony before City Council's Health & Welfare Committee on a pending bill which would greatly increase fines for those who pollute the air. In speaking for the Neighbors, she made it clear that while increased fines are necessary, they are nothing more than a stop-gap measure in light of continuing pollution, and she urged City Council to work with other municipalities and the state and federal government on regional controls.

BLOCK MEETING GETS ONE-WAY RESULTS

Residents of the 300 block of W. Durham St., armed with their owntraffic study, graphs, and statistics, met with a representative of the Streets Dept. and Mrs. Steele to rectify a serious traffic hazard in their block. The thoroughness of their presentation moved the Streets Dept. to make the block one-way westbound. In six months, the neighbors will be asked to evaluate the change at a public hearing when City Council will consider making the decision permanent.

(Ed. Call the office, CH 2-1196, for help in improving conditions on your block.)

LOCAL ZONING CASES DECIDED

A request for an additional apartment at 7000 Lincoln Drive was supported by WMAN and approved by the Zoning Board.

332 W. Hortter Street was granted the use of additional apartments in the building over the objections of tenants and WMAN.

The American Oil Co. has requested and been granted the right to improve its service station property on Lincoln Drive. This was done with the encouragement of WMAN.

SPEAKER'S BUREAU KEEPS BUSY

Ruth Steele, WMAN Exec. Dir., spoke to the Logan Community Council on real estate stabilization and anti-panic techniques.

Mrs. Steele also spoke to the 5th & 6th graders of the Wanamaker Middle Summer School on the role of self-help in neighborhood life.

Bob Anderson, past president, spoke with the sub-committee on housing of the Abington Crisis Forum. This group is concerned with the implementation of the Fair Housing laws, particularly in trying to create a climate for acceptance of interracial housing patterns in all-white areas.

WELCOME WAGON INTERNATIONAL would like to reopen its services in Mt. Airy and surrounding communities. A. Welcome Wagon Hostess is a typical housewife, busy with stimulating activities. She is interested in her community and works with civic groups; and she is a good friend and neighbor.

If you have a car and are interested in this satisfying career in your own neighborhood, call Ruth Steele at CH 2-1196 for further information.

LOCAL PROBLEMS ALLEVIATED

Abandoned cars were removed from Lincoln Drive & Mt. Pleasant, the 900 block of W. Mt. Airy Ave., and the 6900 block of Cresheim Rd. (a pair of derelicts!)

Traffic control signs were reset on Rural Lane and W. Hortter Street.

A public litter basket was placed on the SW corner of Lincoln and Mt. Pleasant.

The PTC cooperated in controlling the eating of lunches in cars parked on our streets by men employed at the Germantown Ave. car barn. Complaints indicated littering.

Two properties on Germantown Ave. made use of our Y.E.S. youngsters to clean up front yards which were beginning to look shabby and run-down.

(Ed. Keep reporting your concerns to our office, CH 2-1196)

TENANTS' MONIES RETURNED

WMAN, working as escrow agent for the Neighborhood Renewal Program, recently turned back to tenants in one building all rents held for them over a six-month period. Under the law, if the owner of the property has not brought the building up to building code standards by a given date, the tenants have the right to the monies, either to do necessary repairs themselves, or to have enough to resettle elsewhere.

WMAN will continue to act as escrow agents for any properties declared unfit by the Dept. of Licenses & Inspections, in our community.

RAP ROOM BECOMES NEGOTIATING CENTER

Youth, parents and representatives of WMAN met with Capt. Guy Kates of the 14th Police District to set up a program of immediate steps to improve Neighborhood-Police relations.

Meeting at the newly opened Rap Room at 7110 Emlen Street, the group openly explored problems of alleged police harassment, particularly of teen-age black males, mutual respect and consideration between police and youth, and direct contact with police assigned to Sector L in West Mt. Airy.

Capt. Kates agreed to have each man assigned to the sector meet with the group, on a weekly rotating basis, to learn of specific problems and to get to know residents of the area better.

In addition Capt. Kates invited representatives of the group, both parents and youth, to be an active part of an ongoing community relations training program for the men of the 14th.

The group will continue to meet each week to evaluate improvements in Neighborhood-Police relations.

OFFICE ON VACATION --- PHONE REMAINS OPEN

The WMAN office will be closed from Aug. 24th to Sept. 9th. You can call President Jerry Balka during the day at KI 6-3750.

HOUSTON LIBRARY BENEFITTED

WMAN, Houston School, EMAN, Holy Cross Church, Northwest Community Ambulance Corps and other local institutions joined to present a highly successful fair on Oct. 5 to help raise funds for Houston's new library.

Ed. Note: Cross community effort usually makes for success in any endeavor.

SHARPNACK ART CENTER SET UP

WMAN and Allens Lane Art Center have helped to start a Sharpnack area arts and crafts program held on Saturday AMs at the 2nd Baptist Church, Gtn & Upsal. The program was set up to serve children in the Upsal, Weaver, Sharpnack, Good Sts. area.

Any adults interested in working with the children can call Mrs. Steele at the office, CH 2-1196.

WMAN RECEIVES MEMORIAL GIFT

The family and friends of the late T. Harold Fox have given a total of $55 to WMAN in his memory. Because of his great interest in his neighborhood and in WMAN, it was felt that donating the money to WMAN was the best use of it.

YOUNG GREAT SOCIETY BAND

The Young Great Society of Germantown is working to organize a rock band. They need equipment (amplifiers, electric guitars, etc.) and/or funds with which to purchase items.

Anyone with equipment to donate can call the office, CH 2-1196. If you wish to contribute, please make your check payable to WMAN, but clearly marked for the Young Great Society Band Fund.

LOCAL CONCERNS HANDLED

2 hour parking regulations went into effect at Mt. Pleasant - Lincoln Drive intersection.

NO PARKING FROM HERE TO CORNER signs were reinstalled at same corner at bus stops.

Streets Dept. repaired broken sidewalk on Sharpnack St., after combined effort of WMAN and Sharpnack Civic Association.

Sewers at Pelham and Cresheim -- 3 were cleaned and 1 is on the repair waiting list.

Sewer at Greene and Hortter cleaned.

Large lot north of Allens Lane on Cresheim Rd. cut and cleared at our request.

Numerous abandoned cars reported. NOTE: keep reporting cars to the office, but keep patience in mind. The police are swamped with abandoned cars.

Several houses inspected by L&I were found in violations of building code and owners notified to correct wrongs.

Junk (old water heaters, stoves, etc.) cleared from Cresheim Drive north of Allens Lane.

A 4-way STOP sign was installed at W. Mt. Airy and Bryan St. to cut down speeders coming west on Mt. Airy.

Cresheim and Carpenter-- WMAN has been trying for a traffic light for four years. Can't have it, but Streets Dept. has installed signs prohibiting parking so close to intersection. This should provide better visibility for drivers. (Send office your comments on this.)

PLEASE DON'T SWEEP LEAVES INTO GUTTERS - THEY ONLY CLOG SEWERS AND MAKE FOR HAZARDS IN ICY WEATHER. WE SUGGEST USING THE NEW HUGE PLASTIC BAGS. TRY 'EM.

CAREER SPEAKERS SOUGHT

Germantown High School's Motivation Program (see enclosed flyer) is looking for people in all professions and industries willing to speak to students on their particular field. If you are interested or want more information call the WMAN office, CH 2-1196.

Germantown also has a need for families in the area willing to host a dozen students in an informal home situation for an evening, to give students a chance to meet local people and relate to the community.

NEW SCHOOLS COMMITTEE CO-CHAIRMEN

Stan Osman and Valarie Wingate, jointly replacing out-going chairman Al Hersh, are very knowledgable on school concerns. They have been active members of the committee for over a year and will continue the fine leadership job provided by Al.

If you want to serve on the Schools Committee, call Ruth Steele at the office, CH 2-1196.

GET SET SET BACK

WMAN joined a city-wide effort to save the Get Set Program, but by the looks of the situation we have failed.

WMAN BOARD RESIGNATION REGRETABLY ACCEPTED

President Jerry Balka has accepted the resignation of Bob De Coursey, due to heavy commitments. Anyone interested in chairing the Planning Committee, please call.

RUTH STEELE REPRESENTS WEST MT. AIRY

Ruth Steele, Executive Director of WMAN, represented us at a series of District 6 conferences reacting to: Innovative Programming, the Desegregation Report and the Mayor's Proposals regarding the School District. These conferences were constituted to hear opinions from professional educators, administrators, parents and community leaders.

WEATHER AIDS HOUSE TOUR

A beautiful day drew hundreds of people to the WMAN House Tour. It made us almost $500 richer. The joint reception (WMAN and the Allens Lane Art Center faculty art show held at Arden Hall) was successful in bringing people together socially. We should do more of this!

FACE TO FACE DRAWS LARGE AUDIENCES

The Face to Face series has drawn over 500 requests for tickets from people throughout the community.

The series has been found to be provocative and stimulating in its attempts to cause individuals to examine their inner feelings on race relations.

Comments and reactions on the series are welcomed; call the office, CH 2-1196.

SPEAKERS BUREAU WORKS STEADILY

Bob Anderson, past WMAN president, continues to meet with block groups in the Glenside area to discuss open housing, racial attitudes, etc.

GERMANTOWN COURIER RETURNS TO MT. AIRY

The Courier will once again be circulated in all of Mt. Airy. Carrier boys, at least 11 years of age, are needed. Papers will be delivered to carriers' homes; carriers will be guaranteed a wage monthly at home. Each carrier can increase his earnings by getting voluntary contributions from recipients of the paper. (It will be delivered throughout the area free.) All carriers will be interviewed at home regarding payments, methods of collecting, etc. before starting a route.

Anyone interested should call the Germantown Courier office, VI 8-4300 and speak with Mr. Higgins, Circulation Manager.

DRIVERS NEEDED FOR HANDICAPPED CHILD

Mitchell Wright, 4 years old, of 40 West Carpenter Lane, needs drivers on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays to take him to and from the Easter Seal School for Cerebral Palsy at City Line and 59th Street.

He has to be there at 10:30 A.M. and must be picked up at 3:00 P.M.

Please find time, and then call Mrs. Ann McGee at CH 2-0934. Even taking one trip will help one of our children!

ZONING NEWS

WMAN supported the request of the Northwest Community Ambulance Corps to expand their premises and the appeal was granted.

We did not oppose the legalizing of an already erected fence and approval was granted by the Zoning Board.

We supported the request of the Lutheran Home for additional fencing of their property. The application was approved.

REAL ESTATE PRACTICES QUESTIONED

Four local brokers had to be reminded to remove SOLD signs left up beyond the legal seven day limit. Continue to report these offenders to the office, CH 2-1196.

The HOME AGENCY has been flooding our area with post card solicitations. Call the office if you are willing to sign a petition to stop this practice.

This is the first time in 1½ years that a broker has tried this tactic in West Mt. Airy. Members: PLEASE TELL NON-MEMBER FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS THAT THIS KIND OF SOLICITATION CAN BE STOPPED LEGALLY!

ANY MEMBER OF WEST MT. AIRY NEIGHBORS IS WELCOME TO COME TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETINGS.

Group Discussion

In another project of the "M" Program, groups of students and their parents engage in a series of weekly discussions led by professional group leaders. With both students and parents proposing the topics for discussion, the sessions seek answers to the considerable concerns of the average adolescent: how to become less apathetic, what makes for good family life, dating and other topics of importance to the two generations.

Participation in the Arts and Sciences

In addition to the curriculum enrichment, "M" students are introduced to our cultural assets, one of civilization's greatest achievements: the Arts. This heritage of beauty is an endowment for each person, and each student is exposed to music, drama, science, and painting; these experiences go beyond this to trips to other cities and to agencies within his own city to broaden his academic spectrum and to present always the possibility of the "Moment of Motivation."

Tutoring

A tutoring program for short term remedial aid and one for advanced work is set up at each "M" high school. Students who need tutoring help receive this from teachers, college students, neighborhood residents and capable upperclassmen of the Motivation Program. Students wishing to proceed beyond class speed can apply for a college professor or graduate student who will serve as a "don" in a person-to-person study situation.

Goal

This is the Motivation Program. It is a program in which we, the home, school and total community, join to develop the vast reservoir of power in our midst: the human mind and spirit. It is our hope that this belief and participation will bring about the greatest fulfillment of our young people.

MOTIVATION PROGRAM

Credo

Each man, irrespective of religion, race, or ethnic origin, is a powerhouse of creative strength. This strength, fully developed, will mean vitality to him, to the community, and to the American people.

We believe that many human beings do consider themselves of low ability and therefore develop little need for achievement. Thus, much power is lost. We believe that the individual, convinced of his ability to succeed in a goal within his grasp, will embrace more readily varied educational opportunities and will strive toward his goal.

The Motivation Program of the School District of Philadelphia believes that a vast number of students with excellent potential for higher education are lost each year because they have not believed themselves capable, nor has college been a believable goal. This program was conceived several years ago in response to a need to develop this great resource. The purpose of the program, in 13 high schools and one vocational-technical school of the city, is to seek out and to develop those students with hidden potential for higher education, those with poor achievement, as well as those who compete easily for marks, but are unmotivated to strive for their best. The success of the program is measurable by the student's developing pride in self, in his need to achieve and in the setting of goals for the future.

How are these desirable ends achieved? What ingredients are contained in this program to seek the "moment of motivation," the readiness for each student? Which teacher, which neighbor, which circumstance touches his life or hers and opens for him new and brighter horizons? The "M" Program, as it is referred to colloquially, is composed of four fundamental parts of a coherent program designed to enrich, broaden and motivate the selected students. These are curricular enrichment, parent and community involvement, cultural enrichment and tutoring.

Curriculum Enrichment

These students in an extended school day are given additional developmental hours in English and mathematics. The courses of all disciplines taken by the "M" students are enriched by teachers stimulated to try bold and new approaches in biology, mathematics and history. The program provides more teachers, classes are smaller and learning through interaction is more meaningful. The students are scheduled for a humanities course in language, political science, anthropology, science and psychology to seek the motivating vehicle and prepare them for college. Special counseling acts, also, as a motivator.

Summer Institutes

"M" summer institutes on college campuses, the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science, provided "M" students with opportunities for exceptional study experience. The 1967 institute had as its theme "The Ethnic Backgrounds of the American People: Ancient Prejudices on New Soil." Through sociology and literature, films and lecturers representing diverse ethnic backgrounds, the students developed strong concepts of America's strength in its people.

Parent and Community Participation

The Parents

The parents of Motivation Program students play a key role. Success, most frequently, is a direct result of parental expectations and the quality of interest. They become partners with the students and the school in the goals and the many projects of the "M" Program. Regular meetings, as a directed organization will help them understand their children's strengths, weaknesses and problems by sharing them with other parents. Parents' knowledge and pride in the potential of their children, go a long way in developing new aspirations for them. The Motivation parents who become active play a dynamic person-to-person role with those Motivation Parents who do not or cannot participate.

The Community

This program seeks the active participation of the community in its goals, and the business, neighborhood and intellectual communities are beginning to accept responsibility toward the "educational process." The students are an important part of the community and will form the nucleus of our society in a few years; hence, it must be the community's interest to see that our young citizens are properly prepared. As part of community involvement, colleges and universities are lending their support to the program academically and financially. Students attend classes on campus for further enrichment and professors come to the high schools to lecture on their disciplines as requested by the Motivation teachers. St. Joseph's College conducts an "M" advanced-standing chemistry course. Visits to the colleges are undertaken frequently. The institutions show their interest in the program through scholarship aid. The senior law school students of the University of Pennsylvania, Temple and Villanova are participating in a productive series of courses presented to the social studies classes of 14 "M" high schools entitled "Law & Society; Mutual Responsibilities in the Law."

Community residents, leaders in industry and commerce, professionals and, simply, talented neighbors are important in this area of the program. By offering themselves as hosts to groups of students for a "host visit" in their homes, these responsible adults promote a climate of confidence in the thinking of the young people and exhibit a willingness to accept their thinking into the scene of action. In another person-to-person project medical students and residents serve as "Dons" to "M" students to stimulate their interest in medicine.

SPECIAL BULLETIN FROM SCHOOLS COMMITTEE

The 5,000 children in GET SET have been granted a two month reprieve. The entire Philadelphia com munity was mobilized and effective in keeping the schools open until February 28, 1969.

The Board of Education, however, has stipulated that it will not be responsible for funding after that date.

We must begin another action to impress upon the Federal Government the importance of GET SET. The first step must be a letter writing campaign so that an avalance of letters is received by Senators Scott and Schweiker, Secretary Finch, Special Assistant Moynihan and President Nixon.

IN ORDER TO ACHEIVE MAXIMUM IMPACT, WE URGE YOU TO MAIL THESE LETTERS ON JANUARY 20, 21 and 22, AND TO URGE OTHERS TO DO THE SAME.

THE FACTS

- 1½ to 2 million are still needed to maintain the 105 GET SET centers through June.
- 5,000 Philadelphia poverty-level children receive a pre-school experience, food, medical and dental care and other necessary services
- GET SET involves economically deprived parents directly in the education of their children. Parents work in Centers as volunteers and attend sessions to learn specific ways to help their children.
- Children and parents become assests to themselves and to the country's future.

WHAT TO DO

1. WRITE YOUR LETTERS TO EACH OF THE FOLLOWING:

Senator Hugh D. Scott and Senator Richard S. Schweiker	Senate Office Building Washington D.C. 20510
Honorable Robert Finch, Secretary, Health, Education & Welfare	330 Independence Ave. S.W. Washington, D.C. 20201
Honorable Daniel Moynihan, Spec. Asst. to the President	The White House 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. Washington, D.C. 20500
Honorable Richard M. Nixon President of the United States	The White House 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. Washington, D. C. 20500

2. MAIL LETTERS JANUARY 20, 21, 22 of 1969. Objective: to achieve maximum impact of an avalanche of letters from Philadelphians.

3. Write as an individual. Use above facts for information. Use your own words. Stress facts you care or know most about. Add your personal opinions. Be brief and to the point. Write clearly.

   REMEMBER TO SIGN YOUR NAME AND GIVE YOUR ADDRESS. DO NOT SEND CARBON COPIES.

4. Pass on your information. Get your family and friends to write also.

SCHOOLS COMMITTEE REPORTS - by Stan Osman, Co-chairman

The newest positive factor in school-community relations in Mt. Airy is the formation of a community coalition consisting of the education committees of WMAN and EastMAN, the principals and presidents of H&SA of Lingelbach, Henry and Houston, and representatives of our area's parochial and private schools. This coalition provides a forum for dialogue on educational matters of common concern, with the goal in mind of developing strong community involvement with the educational process in our community.

At its first meeting the Coalition considered some innovations in communications among area schools. Included in discussions were: the development of a bulletin to all area parents highlighting educational activities in all area schools, and the production of a film by local students demonstrating various activity areas as they are carried out in all the local schools.

Presently there are active community committees now at work in the greater Germantown area, involving citizens in the decisions and policies which will be affecting our children. WMAN's Schools Committee wants to be actively involved in the many facets of education, with representation in these groups such as the Northwest High Planning Committee, the Germantown High Ad Hoc Committee, etc. In order to have a voice in the decision making, more members are needed.

All WMANers with an interest in education are warmly invited to contact Co-chairmen, Stan Osman (CH 7-6576) and Valarie Wingate (VI 3-5709) and sign up to become involved in WMAN School Committee projects and activities.

WHAT CAN I DO?

What can I do? I can speak out when others are silent. I can say man when others say things. I can stay up when others are asleep. I can keep on working when others have stopped to play. I can give life big meanings when others give life little meanings. I can say love when others say hate. I can say every man when others say one man. I can try events by a hard test when others try it by an easy test.

What can I do? I can give myself to life when others refuse themselves to life.

CITY SERVICE NOTES

Emlen Street has been made one way southbound from Carpenter to Pelham.

With what appears to be increasing cutback in quantity and quality of local trash and garbage service, it would be most helpful if all WMANers made a concerted effort at extra special good housekeeping on the outside of their properties.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Gentlemen:

I was glad to see that WMAN has at last spoken out against the nuisance dogs running loose in the neighborhood. I practic ally need to rebuild my lawn from the way they have scratched up the sod, to say nothing about cleaning up after them. I have lived here since 1929, have never complained about others' pets or children, but the situation is very bad and shows a lack of consideration for people who like to keep their gardens and lawns looking decently.

I hope that it will be brought to the attention of Mrs. Chernock that there is not one day when I do not pick up papers that her children drop on their way past my house. Also, the front part of the lawn is being ruined by children walking four abreast, treading on the soil, which is wet and soggy, and thereby ruining it for future planting of either grass seed or ground cover. Nothing can stand up under such treatment. On the other side of the street, there is a rock garden and a boy never walks on the pavement, he walks on these stones every day and has loosened most of them -- another bit of senseless destruction.

You have my permission to print this letter in part or in its entirety.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Leo D. Jones
538 W. Ellet St.

EDITORIAL EDITORIAL

As a member of this community and a teacher at Germantown High, I am getting fed up with the newspaper articles and remarks by neighborhood people about Germantown High and its many alleged problems.

All schools everywhere have problems and perhaps Philadelphia schools have more than most. I don't know about that, but I do know that being there every day and observing first hand is a far cry from sitting in one's home reading a newspaper.

One of the recent articles on the subject which made my blood boil alluded to the fact that Germantown High now has ten security guards. Halfway through the article was admitted the fact that these guards are not entirely for discipline, but for other jobs that have to be done in a school at a non-teaching level. Not until the last paragraph (and admit, dear reader, that you frequently read a headline and a first paragraph only), was there an admission that many schools in the city, including some in the Northeast, have had ten security guards for some time.

I realize that good things that happen in a school are not as newsworthy as stories being told about people being thrown down stairs and boys bringing wine to school, but I am certain that isolated incidents like these could happen at any school and I am becoming sick and tired of reading about it.

Please, let's have a little positive thinking. Otherwise, you;ll all be old fogeys before your time, talking of "the good old days" and teenagers not being the way they used to be--- damn right they re not-- they're more aware, better informed and groovier!

ANNUAL MEETING HELD AT GRACE BAPTIST

The Community Service Award given each year at WMAN's Annual Meeting, went this year to Councilman David Cohen in recognition of his continuous attempt to be responsive to the needs of his constiuents. According to the citation and the introduction by WMANer Jean Bullock, it was felt that in a day when cynicism is the byword in politics, that the man who does his job well as a public official must be encouraged to continue to provide responsible leadership.

Jon Blum was elected president at the general meeting elections held the night of April 14th. An interesting note that points up the change in the attitude of the WMAN Board and of many people in the community toward more involvement in the world around us, is that both Jon, in his acceptance speech and Jerry Balka, in his farewell speech, used excerpts from the same poem, written by a local Girls High student, Lauri Bezner:

..... Existing situations welcome change
To be accomplished by Seeking and finding alternatives
For quenching new thirsts.

Sodety is in such turmoil.
Why should we all pretend?
We can't keep turning away from it
If it's to be different in the end.

Neither speaker knew the other would be using the poem in his speech.

One of the important changes in the by-laws that was passed at the meeting is one which allows for a minimum of three (3) open Board meetings per year, so that everyone, member, non-members alike, may come to these meetings, introduce new business and vote.

APOLOGIES FROM POST OFFICE

If the reader was one of many who received notice of the WMAN Annual Meeting days after it happened, please accept the embarrassed apologies of the United States Post Office.

The notices were mailed on April 3rd, allowing an eleven day delivery time. Complaints reached the WMAN office that notices were received as late as April 23.

We have received assurances that this delay will not occur again.

For those who called in to report the delay, our thanks.

ZONING: ONE SUCCESS, ONE PENDING

WMAN joined with neighbors on Allens La. to oppose an application for housing that did not meet the zoning specifications for the area. The application was denied.

WMAN supported the application of a dry cleaning firm to remain in a local apartment building because of the service offered to the neighborhood and because the area supports a small commercial cluster. The decisions has not yet been handed down by the Zoning Board of Adjustment.

NEEDED

The files are spilling out of drawers at the office. There is need for another three drawer filing cabinet. As long as the drawers work, don"t worry about condition, color, etc. We'll supply the decorators. Call CH 2-1196 if you have one for us.

ANNUAL MEETING - continued

By unanimous vote it was decided that instead of cutting the grass and trimming the stations at Upsal, Carpenter and Allen Lane, WMAN will begin working on seeing to it that the Penn Central takes care of its stations,maintaining them in a safe and attractive way for commuters. The membership approved this new direction with the understanding that it may lead to a suit against the railroad.

ACROSS COMMUNITY CAMP RETURNS

Applications are available at the WMAN office for the summer day camp program offered for pre-first graders. For further information and/or an application form, call Ruth Steele, CH 2-1196. But act wuickly since only the first 25 children from each of the five supporting communities will be taken to fill out the total enrollment of 125.

OFFICE WELCOMES GLCA HELP

Sherry Stodola, a student of Denison University in Philadelphia for urban studies field unit, is lending the office a helping hand two days a week.

Word from Ruth Steele is that she is proving herself invaluable and has helped put down the backlog of paper and other work. Sherry is with the Great Lakes Colleges Association program in our town. Sherry has, among other interests, a desire to learn more about community organizations and how they perate. We're glad to welcome her into WMAN.

AMBULANCE CORPS ISSUES WARNING

The Northwest Community Ambulance Corps is alerting all citizens of the Northwes to be aware of people soliciting money door to door.

The Corps NEVER solicits in this manner, prefering to have mass mailings for membership drives.

If you should be approached by anyone claiming they represent the Corps, please notify the Corps or the Police Dept.

REAL ESTATE SURVEY RESULTS PARTIALLY IN

The study of real estate values in West Mt. Airy being done under the direction of Jack Guttentag, has revealed in its preliminary report that patterns of declining real estate values began to show in West Mt. Airy in the early 50s, but an upswing in the market value of homes began in 1958 (the year WMAN was organized and became directly involved in fighting panic selling, etc.) and has generally been above the city real estate market ever since.

The completed study is expected to be ready for publication this summer.

WESTSIDE ART CENTER THRIVES

Daisy Reddick, Jessie Brown, Mabel Williams and other parents in the area have been assisting with the new art center program each week. Things are going well. A recent cake sale run by interested parents netted enough money to hire a qualified art teacher, Mr. Turnell.

Tom Valleau, director of Colonial Germantown, contacted Butens Paint Store and was given 24 sketch pads and 24 sketching pencils for the program.

The group meets each Saturday at 2 PM at 2nd Baptist Church, Germantown Avenue and Upsal Street.

Youngsters between 6 and 12 years are cordially invited to join the fun. All they need do is show up and have 25¢ to help defray costs of materials.

KUDOS TO JERRY BALKA - FROM ALL

The following is an expression of thanks to Jerry Balka, outgoing president of WMAN which expresses it for all. I quote an excerpt from a letter from Bruce Theunnisen:

"...I want you to know what significant things it seems to me have happened under your presidency during this part year.

You were the person who really pushed Face-to-Face and in spite of the problems, it seems to have more impact in shifting priorities in our community to human concerns than anything else that has happened since many of us have lived here. Under your presidency the Board seems to be moving now in a new direction, and the new members coming on the Board appear to be indicative of the new trend. Thanks for all you have done to make this possible, Jerry."

WMAN TESTIFIES ON LANDLORD CONTROL BILL

Late in February, Ruth Steele, tesifying for WMAN, urged the City Council Committee on Licenses and Inspections to report favorably out of committee a bill which would require out-of-town owners of Philadelphia properties to register with the city a Philadelphia resident who would be legally responsible for the maintainance of the property.

At press time, the bill was still being holed up in committee.

EVER WONDER IF WE'RE UNIQUE?

Report on NCTI Conference - March 27-30, 1969
by Ruth Steele
(with strong assist from Gerry Kraus of Cincinnati)

I have just returned from a conference sponsored by the NCTI (National Committee on Tithing in Investment). This group is examining the possibilities of forming a NATIONAL NEIGHBORS of community groups interested in open housing. Representatives from twelve integrated neighborhoods were invited from New Rochelle, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Oklahoma City, Denver and Los Angeles. Present from our community were Charles Leftwich and me.

35 people, living together, eating together,sharing experiences together and talking over common problems and goals together can be quite a heady experience. Out of it all, I came back to our community with two major threads of thought.

The first was thatsome sort of national agency could be of great service, not only to communities which are already multi-racial, but in helping to educate the vast number of communities in the United States who are not and probably would like to resist becoming multi-racial. The exchange of ideas alone would prove such an organization worthwhile; people in our neighborhood could learn of new approaches to common problems, share measured successes and failures with others and pool our strengths with others in our attempts to make the sweeping necessary changes in our society if the "American Dream" is ever to become a reality for ALL of us.

The second thread was the realization that we have been, in the past, building oriented. That is that for ten years the goals of our community organization and those of many others across the country have been in the areas of "stabilization", zoning control, city services, etc. These are necessary and vital functions of any community organization, but I left Carlton College's campus feeling so strongly that all of us concerned about the future of our people in America must shift our emphasis to the solution of the vast problems affecting people. That is, we in middle class communities have to recognize our responsibility in coping with those problems that may not affect us tomorrow -- but will ultimately affect us all in negative terms if solutions are not forthcoming.

The social consequences of decision about our city, metropolitan area and country DO affect us very seriously. Urban Renewal (removal?), public transportation, housing discrimination, inadequate and unequal school programs, pollution, public recreation, all reverberate in our West Mt. Airy neighborhood. Many of the problems undoubedtly are easily hidden from those with ostrich syndrome, for they are behind the walls of the ghetto areas in our cities. But while there is a gross concentration of these concerns in urban ghettoes, they spill over into communities like our, welcome or not. We must grapple with the solutions with a moral commitment to people and their right to live in dignity and decency.

All this and more is what we talked of. We all agreed there was great need for a National Neighbors. At the least it could provide prospective for our problems. At the most, it could be a vehicle through which and with which the goals of our communities could be fulfilled.

COPS AGAINST KIDS - WHERE WE STAND

(the following article was published recently in the East Mt. Airy Newsletter. However, since it reflects recent WMAN concern with the problem, we are reprinting with the permission of EMAN.)

On St. Valentine's Day, a group of high school students held a dance at the YWCA on Germantown Avenue. Shortly before the end of the affair a quarrel broke out between members of two rival gangs. It flared briefly into a fight, but was soon brought under control by the chaperones.

As the young people were leaving the Y, in perfectly peaceful fashion, if somewhat boisterously, two squad cars of police pulled up; officers jumped out and began to herd the students around, climaxing their action with verbal and physical abuse of several girls who obviously did not jump fast enough to suit the enforcers of law and order.

As it happened, one of the girls who was being pushed around was the sister of a young man named Eldredge Harrison, who had attended the dance as a chaperone and had assisted in stopping the earlier fight before it became serious.

When Mr. Harrison saw his sister on the ground being prodded by a policeman's nightstick, he protested vigorously. The police then turned their attention to him, with the result that he required fourteen stitches in his head after being arrested on obviously false charges.

The incident described above was witnessed not only by a large number of young people (whose word might not have been believed), but by several responsible adults as well. Word of this wanton act of police brutality and illegality spread throughout Germantown. When the Harrison case came up for a hearing the next week, the courtroom was filled with people from all over the community, black and white, all determined that justice would be done.

The police, by the date of the hearing, were fully aware that their case was false and that the community was aroused. As a result, acting under orders from Commissioner Rizzo himself, the precinct commander asked that the hearing be postaponed until the next week. This gave the authorities time to offer Eldredge Harrison a deal: the police would drop charges against him if he would agree to bring no action against them for illegal procedures and brutality. The young man, as advised by counsel, felt that he had no choice but to accept the deal as offered. Failure to accept it would have put him in jeopardy of a conviction. The policemen, as is their practice in such situations, would have sworn that he had interfered with them, resisted them and even attacked them. It would have been his word against theirs, and who would have believed a young black man? So Eldredge and his family signed their waivers at the next hearing - and the case was dismissed.

But the case could not be so easily dismissed from the mind and conscience of the community. A meeting with the precinct captain brought apology, but no real reassurance that the police would desist from their practice of harrassing young people, particularly young black people, but many white youths as well - on the streets of Germantown.

A number of meetings followed, which were attended by representatives of various religious, social and civic organizations. The problem was discussed from every conceivable angle. Several weeks and thousands of words later, it was apparent to everybody concerned that the only way that the community could erect any real barrier to uncontrolled police behavior was to organize itself on a broad representative base and work to establish the community's control over the community's police.

The result of all this was the formation of the Germantown Council for Community Control of Police, composed of representatives from a variety of organizations functioning the Greater Germantown, and dedicated - in the words of its Statement of Purpose, the "provide the people of Germantown with a vehicle through which they can establish the maximum amount of community control of police operations consistent with good law enforcement".

The GCCCP has been meeting weekly for the past two months, and has decided that the increasing number of cases of reported harassment by police should be brought to the attention of the entire community.

They are therefore planning an open meeting on the evening of TUESDAY, JUNE 3, at which many of these cases will be documented and discussed. The captain of the 14th Precinct, Captain Guy Kates has been invited to attend and to report to the community about the steps he has taken or is prepared to take, to comepl his men to operate according to human standards that are acceptable to the community.

At its last meeting, the EMAN Board voted that it would adjourn its June meeting to Vernon House on June 3, so that every board member could see for himself what has been happening and help decide where Germantown, of which East Mt. Airy is a part, can go from here.

Don't you think you should be there too?

NEW EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR APPOINTED

Mrs. Yvonne Haskins has been appointed as the Executive Director of West Mount Airy Neighbors as of February 1, 1971. Mrs. Haskins is in the process of moving to West Mount Airy from North Central Philadelphia and brings to the position her experience as a juvenile aid officer with the Police Department, a police-community relations specialist and community organizer with the Commission on Human Relations, and most recently an educational program planner with the Board of Education. She will be residing at 7035 McCallum Street with her husband, Harold, and two children, Randall and Russell.

LETTER FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Dear West Mount Airy Neighbors:

I am new to this area and to the position of Executive Director of WMAN. This means quite simply that for the next few weeks I shall be primarily concerned with office management and getting to know as many of the people who are concerned about and committed to community life in West Mount Airy.

Since WMAN will be celebrating its 13th anniversary this year, the organization is certainly an "established" entity in the community, as well as having gained city-wide and nation-wide recognition for its work in the area of real estate practices. The goals and successes in the areas of "stabilization", zoning control, city services, etc., have been noteworthy and must continue to be a function of any community organization, with constant evaluation and reinterpretation by its members. However, my short existence in this position has made me keenly aware of the multitude of resources and expertise of the people who live in this community. We run the gamit of skills and knowledge from every sector of our society, whether gainfully employed or retired, whether housewife or student. It is important, therefore, that, as we have looked at and responded to real estate needs, we begin to muster the resource people of our community to address the many problems and needs that are as inherent in West Mount Airy as they are in any other area of the city.

WMAN PLANS ANNUAL BOARD MEETING

The March Board Meeting (Mon., March 15, 8:00pm, Summit Church) will be largely devoted to planning for the Annual Board Meeting to be held sometime in April. We expect an overflow audience of members and interested neighbors. The announcements will be distributed soon. WE NEED VOLUNTEERS to help spread the word (flyers, posters) and take care of all the small details of the BIG NIGHT. Please call the office and give us a bit of your time.

Let us not kid ourselves into thinking that West Mount Airy does not need our individual support. This support must go beyond the paying of dues into time and service peculiar to the skills that each can offer.

Preliminary examination of the records of WMAN membership substantiates my belief that this area has perhaps the highest percentage of professional service people in Phila. There is no excuse for our not responding to the keeping of your traditions: "To maintain and improve the desirability of Mt. Airy as a place to live, with particular attention to its physical properties, educational and cultural institutions, and community

WMAN'S "REP" IN OTHER CITIES

The office has received inquiries about WMAN's activities from places as Far, far away as Baltimore, Md., and Durham, N.C. The Human Relations Commission of Durham, no less, wants to "develop a similar program as WMAN in our city". How about that! Hopefully, the program picture we present is an accurate one according to today's activities and not just old "rep". (a subtle hint?)

WMAN BOARD MEETS WITH YOUTH

The February Board meeting of WMAN was specifically set up to meet with several young people who have expressed a need for youth programs to WMAN's Youth Committee (thanks to Woody Baskerville, Tom Anderson). With the assistance of a group dynamics consultant, Mrs. Elsie Cross, the young men were able to provide the Board with some insight on recreational needs for youth in West Mt. Airy. WMAN is currently making plans for a specific program response soon.

WELCOME TO NEW MEMBERS

The following neighbors have joined WMAN this year:

Mr. & Mrs. Bernard Camins

Mrs. Elsie Cross

WMAN welcomes your membership and enthusiastic involvement and support in the life of your community.

Do you have a neighbor who is not a member of WMAN? Help us report a longer list of names next time.

DAY CARE PROGRAM: DO WE NEED IT?

In the next few months, the question of day care for West Mt. Airy is going to be seriously considered in our community. The Philadelphia Day Care Council, in cooperation with various community groups and churches, is having a meeting on Thursday, March 18, 1971, 8:15 pm, at the Kelly School, Hansberry & Pulaski Streets. The purpose of the meeting is to educate parents as to the possibilities of day care programs in our area (after school recreation, full day, etc.). Representatives from the Day Care Council will be there to answer questions. All interested persons should attend. Find out what can be done to help meet any of your individual needs.

During the next couple of months a survey will be conducted in the West Mount Airy area by volunteers interested in day care programs. The results of this survey are crucial in determining:

1. What kinds of needs for day care are present?
2. Who has these needs?
3. How much of desired programs can be financed by federal funds?

Please cooperate when someone calls on you--better yet, contact WMAN office to help in conducting survey. Here's another way for you to help your community!
(Interested persons may also contact Mrs. Jan Young at CH 7-8976 or Mrs. Flora Wolf at VI 8-7222)

OPTIONS FOR WOMEN starts their next group on Friday, April 2, in Wynnefield. Call Vicki Kramer, TR 8-6728 for further information.

GIRL SCOUTS HELP SENIOR CITIZENS

The Girls Scouts Cadet Troop, sponsored by WMAN and under the leadership of Mrs. Alex Hersh, have been very helpful to the residents of Emlen Arms. Almost every day will find some of the Scouts doing grocery shopping, medicine shopping, office work, or simply being companions and building friendships. They've even had a birthday party for the tenants! WMAN salutes our troop. We call this getting to the real "nitty-gritty" of giving a helping hand to a neighbor.

ACROSS COMMUNITY CAMP APPLICATION

Across Community Camp will be held for the fifth consecutive year at Chestnut Hill Academy from July 12th to the 30th, 1971, 9:00 am until Noon.

It is a creative fun camp for 132 pre-first grade children, drawn from five neighboring communities. Activities include music, arts and crafts, wading and water play, as well as several excursions. The staff will be group leaders and youth assistant drawn from neighboring communities. Groups will be limited to a maximum of 20 children. Children must be four years old by July to qualify for enrollment.

The fee is $10. for the 3 weeks. Contributions are gratefully accepted for salaries, curriculum materials, supplies, refreshments and other expenses. Enrollment in the camp will be on a FIRST COME basis. The deadline for enrollment will be June 15th. Applications can be obtained at the WMAN office.

REAL ESTATE: SOMETHING GOOD, SOMETHING BAD!

Good news first!

The Board of Realtors has adopted a set of guidelines for solicitation by city realtors, which grew out of the concern of the Board over the problem of illegal and unethical solicitation practices and their negative effect on neighborhood stabilization. In 1967, Phila. City Council made it illegal for any broker to solicit any homeowner who had given him formal notice that he did not desire to be solicited. It seems that the large majority have complied with this law. The new guidelines are designed to go one step farther than the law requires. The Board is advising its members not to do any soliciting in "sensitive neighborhoods", and the Board will designate areas of the city it considers sensitive and advise members. After an area has been so designated, realtors will be asked not to solicit its residents whether or not they have asked not to be solicited, and to remove all "Sale" signs whenever 3 or more signs are found to be posted in the same block.

WHICH LEADS US INTO BAD NEWS....

LAZAR ASSOCIATES has been hard at work sending out solicitations to homeowners in West Mt. Airy. Thus far, the WMAN office has received complaints from nine blocks. In spite of the fact that in 1968, WMAN sought and received agreements from realtors operating in the community to refrain from the wholesale solicitation of entire blocks, Lazar continues this practice. WMAN is requesting that all who have received such solicitations to please contact Yvonne Haskins so that we may mail petitions to you against such practice.

WMAN ASSISTS MCCALLUM MANOR

In February, a request was made to WMAN by the tenants of McCallum Manor for legal advice in dealing with the landlord around problems in the building. Lou Levy responded and met with the tenants and management, and they are beginning to work toward the resolution of problems.

WMAN attorney Jerry Balka is also deeply involved with the tenants of the Marita Apartments at Mt. Airy and Emlen Sts. Last year we worked with the tenants of the Rosemary Garden Apartments. Your community organization is prepared to help tenants solve their problems.

WMAN TO BRING SUIT

WMAN Planning Committee has been given the authority to bring suits against the owners of properties at Wayne & Carpenter Sts. and McCallum & Westview Sts. These have long been problem properties with no results to the endless amount of time devoted by WMAN.

WMAN was successful in getting the promise of additional street lighting in the 100 block of W. Cliveden St. The Streets Department has ordered a light to be installed near the Emlen St. end of the block. Anyone else having street light problems?

"WALK AND TALK" PLANS

The successful evening enjoyed so much by our residents last year is high on the WMAN agenda for social events this spring. There will be a feature article in the April Newsletter spelling out plans and needs of the program.

relations".

Are you an architect? gardener? a city planner? a teacher? a lawyer? an educational planner? a plumber? a physician? writer? a carpenter? a social worker? a proposal writer? a politician?

Are you retired? a housewife? a student? etc.,etc.....?

Each of you has some skill to give to your community!

It would be unfortunate indeed if you think that your professional life does not relate to your community life.

The viable community group is the one which can correlate and integrate the two "hats" within its membership. The viable organization is also one which can generate a social and cultural interaction among its members. The most valuable tool of any organization is the ability of its members to speak face to face, one on one about its problems and programs. It is not my intention for this newsletter to substitute for people-to-people contact. I would rather think that this letter will generate the beginning seeds of programs for our neighborhood.

We should be constantly reminded that this community, in which each of us has selected to reside and bring up our children, is one of the last of its kind remaining within the city of Philadelphia. West Mt. Airy has its youth problems, continues to have its housin problems, has small business sections in rapid decay; but most of all, West Mt. Airy is suffering from a communications problem.

How can we relate our skills to some of our needs? How can we expose our youth and ourselves to the social integration so vitally important to this community?

Please come to our Annual Board meeting in April and bring one or two of your neighbors. Our committees are being reorganized to deal with concrete, visible programs in the coming year. We are not looking so much for grandiose ideas, but continuity of program based on small successes.

To those of you who have given you time in the past, your continued involvement will be vital. To those of you who have been reluctant to participate, involve yourselves NOW. To those of you who do not believe in participation, please read this letter one more time!

As your Executive Director, I must depend upon you to offer your skil or respond when called upon.

I look forward to meeting you soon

Sincerely,

Yvonne Hiatkins

WMAN BOARD MEETING
Monday, December 13
8:00 P.M.
"SCHOOLS AND THE FUTURE OF OUR COMMUNITY AS A PLACE TO LIVE"

Summit Presbyterian Church
Greene & Westview Streets

All Board Meetings are open

DECEMBER MEETING PLANS

A steering committee on education met on November 23 to plan the Community-Board meeting scheduled for December 13, 1971. The discussion centered on the relationship between the schools and our community. How does the under-utilization and the public esteem of the public education system affect the community? What are the possibilities for inter-area cooperation to develop political "muscle" and to develop acceptable secondary schools for our area? How do we actively draw families into public schools?

These and other questions of priorities and needs concerning education in our community will be explored at the Open Board Meeting. Leaders from Chestnut Hill and East Mt. Airy have been invited to form a panel with a WMAN representative to make a brief presentation.

We plan a new approach to a long-festering problem. Come and make it work.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

What is the proper role of a community organization? This question has long puzzled WMAN, never more so than during the past several months. It is the tradition of WMAN to assume a position of leadership regarding issues facing the community. We continue to wrestle, however, with the appropriate range of those issues, as well as the relationship between WMAN and the people who make up the community.

I believe that we must have a community organization which reaches out to all members of the community in an attempt to create a humane atmosphere which consciously and explictly includes all the residents of WMA in its efforts. Particularly, we must be concerned with our young and our elderly.

For our young, we must provide not only schooling, but an early welcome into community responsibility. The now clean white wall at Lincoln Drive and Mt. Pleasant demonstrates that the responsibility is latent and can be tapped.

For our elderly, we must provide a sense that they have not been cast out merely because they are old. We must make use of their talents as we plan to do by bringing them together with young people so their skills can be passed on. We must respect their needs, as Yvonne proposes further in this newsletter.

In the context of those groups of people, WMAN must play a leadership role. The organization must continue to identify the needs of the people in the community and must continue to call upon all members of the community to address themselves to the solution of those problems.

The proposals advanced by WMAN may not always have the support of all residents of the WMA community. Proposals must nonetheless be put forward, and the Board of WMAN must speak clearly its opinions on questions which concern us. I believe we must speak both to the community and, when we can, for it. The positions taken by WMAN will only have life and validity of their own, however, if they are the result of true community deliberation and action.

On December 13, we will have our first open meeting devoted to education. As you will read elsewhere in the newsletter, a steering committee met to plan this session. We already have several people committed to working on school problems, and Oliver Brown, the former staff director of the School District's Decentrailization Commission, has agreed to provide leadership.

The quality of education available to WMA residents (public and private) is critical to the quality of our community--even critical to its existence. We have active home and school assns. at our two elementary schools. What about WMAN's responsibility for those schools? What about our community's responsibility for a middle school? for our public high school?

These issues must be discussed by WMAN. We will begin the discussion on December 13. I hope you will be there.

Edwin D. Wolf

CONGRATULATIONS!!

WMAN extends congratulations to our newly elected City Council representative, Joseph E. Coleman. Mr. Coleman has already begun to work toward fulfilling his campaign promise of establishing an Advisory Council on the many problems of the various areas of our district. The Council will include persons representing every segment and area of our district. WMAN looks forward to a worthwhile and productive relationship with Mr. Coleman.

RE-BIRTH OF BLOCK CAPTAIN PROGRAM

In an important development, the WMAN Board, meeting on Nov. 29, approved a proposal to reestablish the block captain program as an independent operating froup within the organizations structure. The Board authorized the creation of a Block Captain Task Force which will coordinate the program.

As before, the heart of the program will be block captains on every block in our community--over 200. These captains will be assisted by an area leader, who will, in turn, be a member of the Block Captain Task Force. We expect to begin operations soon with approximately 50 blocks covered by active block captains.

One difference between the present setup and the previous one is that the area leaders will no longer necessarily be the Board members. The Board recognized that that system did not work two years ago when the program was first organized; instead, it is hoped that by involving area leaders in the program new potential board members will emerge to give new vitality to the leadership of the organization.

Another significant difference is that the Task Force will report directly to the Board, and be under the operational guidance of the President and the Executive Director. Closer control and greater accountability should result from this.

We have been encouraged to try the block captain effort again because of the many new ideas that are coming into the organization from WMA residents who have not previously been involved in WMAN, and because we have available to us several social work students who will be working on the program. Finally, we have vigorous leadership of the program from Madelyn Morris and Mabel Williams. We hope you will want to join in this program.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR REPORTS...

One of our Temple students spent two afternoons recently talking to staff and residents of Emlen Arms, public housing for the elderly. We wanted to know how WMAN could effectively assist the people there.

We learned that the most pressing and continuous need is transportation to stores. When one of the biggest problems in a person's life is something that the majority of the people in the community take pretty much for granted, it is difficult for the community to respond adequately. Let's face it. Emlen Arms needs a community car pool on a regularly operating basis. This could mean one volunteer giving up two hours a month, more or less, but the important overriding element is consistency in commitment. This need won't go away.

Something else we learned about is a "sing-a-long brithday party" held once a month for all the residents. They like to have some kind of entertainment for these occasions, especially the kind they can participate--dancing, singing, plays, etc.

These are simple needs with very little work involved. I promised Emlen Arms that our Newsletter would be used to communicate some of their needs to the community. We should be able to respond to their modest request. Let us hear from you.

STUDENT REPORTS...

On the evening of Nov. 10, Mt. Airy Methodist Church was the scene of an exciting meeting during which some young people of our community expressed a wish to engage in productive recreation and jobs, rather than causing a disturbance with aimless activities.

One of the principle speakers was Mrs. Florence Garrett. She has been instrumental in bridging the generation gap and instilling a feeling of trust because of her genuine concern. She praises our youth when they are praiseworthy and lets them know when they need reprimanding.

The young men present came up with a suggestion that they could work at odd jobs to earn money for a pool table. "We could rake leaves, clean your cellars--just give us jobs and we'll do them!"

Mrs. Verna Bair, who had sponsored the first meeting with the youth, announced that as a result of the clean-up job done by the youngsters on the wall at Lincoln Drive and Mt. Pleasant, money was donated as a kick-off towards their goal.

A committee of youth and adults was formed. The need for youth activities centers in the churches was discussed. Supervision will be needed. How can you help?

Let's start by supporting the Mt. Airy Youth Employment Service, and allow these young men and women to participate in the betterment of our community. Help them to help themselves! How about it?

Debbie Klein,
Temple U. Student

HIGHLIGHT OF NOV. MEETING

Our second monthly open board meeting took place on Monday, Nov. 15., at Summit Church. For the second time, more than 100 residents came to hear and be heard--and get involved.

The topic for the evening was the role of WMAN in the preservation of property values in the Community. Ned Wolf posited that WMAN must continue to have a major concern with property, even as we move into other more service-directed areas. There followed a discussion of different kinds of problems WMAN is dealing with.

First, JEAN BULLOCK, our corresponding secretary and longtime board member, described some of the difficulties she and others had in organizing the tenants at the Marita Apartments--where Jean lives--to deal with intolerable conditions. After many months of rent withholding, the tenants compelled the owners to sign an agreement to make a real commitment to maintaining the property. Jean pointed out that although the organization technique is very effective, it took a great deal of effort to keep the tenants together.

The discussion recognized that apartments present a real challenge to the community organization, particularly because those which are in a deteriorating condition attract tenants who are more transient and who, therefore, have less interest in making the landlord make a commitment to adequate maintenance. It was agreed that this problem should receive serious attention from our Land Use group, headed by Lou Levy.

The second presentation was by LOU LEVY, one of our Vice Presidents, and past President of WMAN. Lou spoke about our attention to problem properties, such as those at Wayne and Carpenter and at Westview and McCallum. After several years' effort on both of them by Lou and JERRY BALKA, it appears that work hasbegun on both to fix them up. Lou also discussed our activities in response to requests for zoning changes.

Lou emphasized in addition the problem of illegal conversions--where an owner will create a separate dwelling unit which is not authorized by the zoning classification. This is traditionally a problem in declining neighborhoods, and WMA must be alert to prevent its spread.

Lou and GREY SMITH also introduce the main topic of the evening - the steam plant site at Pelham and Hortter. WMAN has been seeking a use for the property for many years. Last spring, the City approached our land use group with a proposal for 40 units of low income housing for the elderly on the site, to be built with city-state urban renewal funds and federal housing subsidies. The Land Use group rejected the proposal on the grounds that the property could not support that number of units. The next thing we knew, the Redevelopment Authority had declared the block "blighted" and had announced its intention to proceed with the project.

This caused a furor among the residents on Pelham Road and great concern in the land use group. A wild meeting was held at St. Madeleine Sophie Church in June to allow the city representatives to present the project. The opposition was enormous. At the meeting it was agreed to form a committee to examine the city proposal and to develop alternatives. That meeting was convened by WMAN, and Curtis Carson was selected as the leader of the group.

Grey Smith has attended most of the meetings and reported that there is not a clear understanding of the nature of the project among the Pelham residents. There is confusion between low-rent public housing and the Section 236 low income housing for the elderly which is being proposed for the site. He reported that the members of the committee have looked into alternatives and have not yet found a feasible one.

In an extensive discussion, most of the sentiment at the board meeting was expressed in support of the proposed use of the property. But upon the urging of Councilman-elect Joe Coleman, there was considerable concern about WMAN decreeing support for the plan without having heard from the opponents. (Although there were residents of the area, including one family living directly across the street from the site, no one attended who was opposed to the project.) It was generally agreed that WMAN should attempt to find out directly from the opponents what their views were. Several of those present agreed to meet under the leadership of LARRY HERLIC to discuss and carry out meetings with the residents of Pelham Road and Hortter Street who had some concern about the proposed use. They will report back at the January meeting and make recommendations to the Board for action WMAN should take.

HENRY HOME & SCHOOL PLANS.....

the Henry Home & School Assn. plans an open house at the school on Thursday, January 18, 1972, begining at 7:00 p.m. This occasion will provide us with the oportunity to honor our principal, our Councilwoman-at-large and someone we all know to be a very unusual person, Mrs. Beatrice Chernock. The community is invited to participate in thanking Mrs. Chernock for many years of dedicated service and wishing her well in her new position.

Parents and other community people interested in seeing classrooms and meeting some of the teachers will also be a part of this happy festivity.

Come on out to recognize a person who has contributed much to our community and learn all that is going on with the Association.

SUMMIT CONFERENCE: EMAN-WMAN

On Dec. 4, from 9:30 am to 3:00 pm, East Mt. Airy Neighbors and West Mt. Airy Neighbors have been invited by the Urban Church Institute to hold a joint conference on the Lutheran Seminary grounds. There will be 15 representatives selected to attend by each organization.

The primary topic of concern will be the organizational interrelation and communication between EMAN and WMAN. In our current political climate, what organizational influences are possible in providing recreational facilities for youth, employment opportunities for youth, the development of our BIG divider, Germantown Avenue? What can we do about our schools, health care, police-community relations, senior citizens, etc.?

There are many common values and goals between the two organizations. The plan is to sort them out, establish priorities and lines of communication, and set short and long range goals.

We welcome this conference as a beginning!

Note: According to the 14th Dist., abandoned cars are not being removed from the area as quickly as they should be. It appears that a "bueaucratic shuffle" is going on --the 14th Dist. submits the list of cars to be towed away...this list is returned to the district for reverification on each individual report. 150 cars were the subject of such shuffling during one week in November.

W MA

We have everything in West Mt. Airy . . .

. . . between Germantown Ave. and Fairmount Park, and between Johnson St. and Cresheim Park.

Our neighborhood is a unique community. We have a fine "mix" of economic groups, racial groups, cultural groups, religious groups. We have $100,000 homes and $10,000 homes, $300 apartments, and $50 apartments. We have fine schools, good transportation, convenient shopping.

But changes are taking place . . .

. . . Americans are the moving-est people. We move on the average once every five years. So all kinds of Americans are moving out of our neighborhood, and all kinds of Americans are moving into our neighborhood.

Moving is change. Change has helped make this country strong. But it's important that changes be planned and understood. We know that in personal lives, we don't like to make changes until we've thought them out. With a constantly changing neighborhood, it's important that these changes, too, be thought out.

That's why . . .

. . . We who live in West Mt. Airy have joined together to think and act on changes in our neighborhood. That's why we've formed the . . . West Mt. Airy Neighbors — dedicated to seeking solutions to our neighborhood problems and to encouraging changes that will lead to an even better place to live.

What are the West Mt. Airy Neighbors doing? . . .

. . . The West Mt. Airy Neighbors is already a going concern. We have a wealth of talents on our committees, an Executive Secretary, and a sizable treasury . . . all of which make for a strong, permanent, effective organization.

We have set up a number of committees to work for us.

The Schools Committee is working to see that our schools — public, parochial, and private — best meet the educational and social needs of our children.

The Zoning Committee is keeping a watchful eye on all proposed zoning changes so that the public interest of all of us is not injured by the special interests of a few.

The Real Estate Practices Committee is working with real estate brokers to eliminate the sort of selling and buying practices that tend to reduce values rather than enhance them.

The City Services Committee is working with City departments to keep our neighborhood clean, safe, healthy — a pleasant place to live.

The Youth Services Committee is promoting social activities and job opportunities for teen-agers, and is strengthening understanding and communication between young people and adults in the community.

The Community Relations Committee is working to relieve the inevitable misunderstandings which arise when 5000 families live near one another.

Other committees work on other neighborhood problems as they arise. And, of course, still others are working to make the West Mt. Airy Neighbors ever more effective.

How can we work better together as neighbors? . . .

. . . To make any group work, it takes money and people — people who have a real concern for the sort of neighborhood they live in — people such as you.

What does this mean to you? . . .

. . . You've picked West Mt. Airy as your neighborhood. You have an investment in money and happiness here. Naturally you want to see this neighborhood thrive as a wonderful place in which you can live enjoyably. You can assure this by joining the West Mt. Airy Neighbors and offering your abilities and support.

Green country town in Philadelphia

Planning to move? If so, you're thinking about specifics like houses, schools and transportation. But you're also very much concerned with an intangible—the "atmosphere" you hope to find.

So you're looking for a community where you and your family can put down roots—where you will find physical, social and cultural enrichment—in which you can take pride.

West Mount Airy, a beautiful, green community in Northwest Philadelphia, has in abundance the serene, satisfying atmosphere that many families want. Offering all the city's advantages, West Mount Airy proves that you need not move to the suburbs to enjoy the peaceful, relaxed tempo of living with nature. Here, within 20 minutes of City Hall, is truly the "green country town in Philadelphia."

Wooded paths, flowers, streams

Almost no other urban area—and few suburbs—are as richly endowed with verdant parkland, shady woods and cool streams as West Mount Airy. It is bounded on two sides and partially bisected by a vast, continuous park belt, comprising all of Carpenter Woods and major portions of the Wissahickon and Cresheim Creek valleys.

The area's 1385 acres of parkland —the equivalent of 346 city blocks— are enjoyed for picnics, canoeing, trout fishing, ice skating, horseback riding, bird watching, duck feeding and hiking. While this vast park system belongs to all Philadelphians, West Mount Airy people have a special fondness for its wild flowers, wooded paths and streams—since so much of it lies within or on their borders. Others must drive to enjoy these beauties but most West Mount Airy residents are within leisurely walking distance, and avail themselves of this privilege throughout the year.

Picturesque stone walls and towers still stand along Wissahickon and Cresheim Creeks, marking the sites of colonial mills which declined long before Philadelphia restored these valleys to their original wilderness state. A few buildings of this era survive—notably Valley Green Inn, a favorite haunt of West Mount Airy neighbors.

Public golf courses, tennis courts and supervised playgrounds are also located in and near West Mount Airy. A riding academy provides saddle horses at reasonable rates. Skating and badminton clubs, in nearby Chestnut Hill, maintain indoor facilities for the public.

Rolling estates mold area's "look"

Prosperous 19th Century Philadelphians, attracted by West Mount Airy's beauty, built large estates. Others built "summer residences" to take advantage of 15° to 20° cooler temperatures. The winding streets, mammoth trees and low population density of much of the area today reflect those "country" estates.

West Mount Airy developed at a leisurely pace and exhibits a desirable variety of architectural styles. In size, West Mount Airy homes range from neat "rows" and handsome "twins" to large estates with imposing houses and swimming pools. In time, they range from Upsala—built in 1798 and one of the finest examples of Federal architecture—to rambling contemporary dwellings.

Typically, West Mount Airy homes are built of native Wissahickon stone, with fireplaces and large gardens. Charming houses in the Philadelphia Federal style and other solidly-built older homes are often available for loving and enthusiastic modernization by their proud purchasers. In houses of all types, West Mount Airy offers the finest property values anywhere in the city or surrounding suburbs.

From every walk of life

Since colonial days the people of West Mount Airy have represented an unusually well balanced cross section of the social and economic worlds. The earliest settlers were artisans and farmers. And, from the beginning, the beauty of the area has also attracted respected and influential citizens from all walks of life. Artists, bankers, tradesmen, professional people and wage earners have found the kind of living they want in West Mount Airy. This stable community has always produced more than its share of city, state and national leaders. Residents represent all races and creeds.

West Mount Airy children attend public and private schools located in the community and neighboring Germantown and Chestnut Hill. From cooperative nursery schools through public and private primary, intermediate and high schools, the quality of education is high.

Rich cultural, spiritual resources

The Allens Lane Art Center offers instruction in the arts and related cultural activities. The Stagecrafters, an amateur theatrical group, produce plays of interest in Chestnut Hill. The Wissahickon Symphony and other musical groups present frequent concerts and welcome new members. Historic houses, in West Mount Airy and Germantown, are maintained by local historical societies and are open to the public.

Public library branches in West Mount Airy and Germantown serve the community and the Friends Free Library, of Germantown, maintains an outstanding non-fiction collection for the public. Many nature groups take advantage of the unusual abundance of birds and wild flowers in the area's parks.

Residents are served by churches and synagogues, representing Catholic, Jewish and several Protestant faiths.

Convenient shopping, transportation

The West Mount Airy shopping area, along Germantown Avenue, offers a choice of major food markets and many specialty shops. A short distance from West Mount Airy by car, trolley, or bus, the Germantown-Chelten Avenue and Chestnut Hill shopping districts provide household and clothing needs for every taste.

West Mount Airy residents enjoy the benefits of extensive parks, woods and streams, yet are only minutes from Center City Philadelphia by car or convenient, speedy public transportation. The Pennsylvania and Reading Railroad Chestnut Hill branches serve the area, and passengers benefit from the low-fare "Operation Northwest" plan. The area is also served by PTC 23 trolley, 53 trolley and H bus—as well as special "shoppers" buses.

West Mount Airy people like it

Finally, your best way of judging a community is by the character of its people, as reflected in their attitude toward it. Are they deeply interested or indifferent? In this you are fortunate, if West Mount Airy is your choice of residence.

The West Mount Airy Neighbors Association works tirelessly to maintain and improve West Mount Airy as a place to live. The group watchfully guards against zoning violations and undesirable real estate practices, and is concerned with physical properties, educational and cultural institutions and community relations.

West Mount Airy people find that working together for the community is a rewarding pathway to satisfaction. They will warmly welcome you to West Mount Airy—this lovely, lively, on-the-move community!

FROM THE DESK OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR:

At its May 12th meeting, your Board of Directors:

..... decided to use the office phone, CH 2-1196, as a central number to be called by anyone having a concern or complaint about police activities, attitudes, etc. in the community.

..... agreed to start an on-going file of complaints about police activity, to be used in meetings of the WMAN Community Relations Committee and the Police Department.

..... heard that the Community Relations Committee has set up a group of volunteer lawyers who will be on call to help anyone in the community who may need emergency law services regarding police actions.

..... heard of progress made in community relations by a group of our men working with young people in the Mt. Plesant-Mower area, who are meeting regularly to work through problems.

..... voted to ask East Mt. Airy Neighbors to consider working out the feasibility of a community newspaper, The Mt. Airy News.

..... was asked by our new president, Jon Blum, to bring in five new members each as part of our on-going membership campaign.

..... heard that we are just about keeping our financial head above water, and that there must be more follow-up on membership renewals.

..... set up a committee to consider guidelines for WMAN to follow in answering the many requests for support (financial and otherwise) from other organizations and groups throughout the city.

..... hear the Railroad Committee report of its testimony before the Public Utilities Commission regarding the Penn Central's responsibility for its commuter stations -- the beginning of the new approach to be taken with P.C., voted at the annual meeting.

..... voted unanimously to urge a YES vote on BOTH questions on the May 20th primary ballot: Merit Selection of Judges and the School Bond Question

Currently, your officers and committees:

..... are asking you to send to the office names of blocks which are in great need of street cleaning; please indicate the block number

..... are working on this year's Volunteer Coupon Booklet which will offer you a variety of ways to serve your community for the 1969-70 year.

..... are developing an old concept for better contact with all our residents: The Block Captain Plan. Watch for further developments.

nations that Spain would soon be a fit companion and liberal colleague, while the Spanish public would be kept in the dark about the promise of democracy. The fact that the recent attempt by leading liberals to get in touch with the U.S. Secretary of State was led by a monarchist, Count de Motrico, seems to bear out the second view.

Spain may have to wait a long time to find out whether or not the new King will end totalitarianism. Most people, from journalists to millionaires, believe that nothing much will change with restoration of the monarchy. The army will remain in control; the landlords will remain in control; the Fascist ruling elite, joined by the prosperous new middle class, will continue the status quo; the press will remain corrupt, and controlled by the regime. There will be no free unions, in the European or American sense. Wages will remain the lowest in Europe. Nothing much will be done by the rulers for the ruled. Unless of course there is an uprising. The strangest change in 1970, as compared with the violent uprising of 1964 and following years, was the comparative silence in the universities. So far this year I know of no student demonstrations.

Spain is a Fascist state, according to any definition. The power elite, this military-industrial complex, intends to rule the country when Don Juan Carlos becomes king. However, every Spaniard to whom I have talked in the past seventeen years (and I have never met a true Fascist), believes that thirty years of political stagnation will cease when the monarchy is restored; and many believe that once they have a monarchy they will get a two-party system and gray fascism will fade away. □

SUBURB VS. GHETTO

THE MORAL DILEMMA OF ZONING

DAVID K. SHIPLER
Mr. Shipler is a reporter for The New York Times who specializes in housing and planning.

Major civil rights organizations have begun a struggle against what may prove to be one of white America's most sophisticated and resilient devices of segregation—suburban zoning laws. These local ordinances, placed on the books by thousands of towns and villages to fortify themselves against the invasion of poverty, crime, congestion and ugliness from the central cities, have screened out all but the most expensive single-family houses on large lots, thus keeping the working class and the poor safe distances away, in the decaying ghettos.

The laws often prescribe minimum lot sizes of an acre or more, or simply ban all apartment houses. They have come under recent attack by respected urban planners, Presidents' commissions and even a few daring souls in the Nixon Administration. But more concretely, zoning that creates enclaves of lovely homes along graceful, tree-lined streets has become the target of constitutional challenges in the courts by the NAACP, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH) and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. Lawyers are looking for a landmark decision from the Supreme Court in any of at least four cases now in lower federal courts.

Much of the zoning has been in effect for decades, since long before suburbanites were thinking explicitly of excluding blacks. The laws' insidiousness has emerged as Negro families have crowded into the cities, as the cities' vacant land has diminished to the point where federal housing programs are now bottlenecked, and as factories offering blue-collar jobs have moved out to the suburbs, sometimes into the same towns that don't want to house the people who need the jobs most desperately. One result is a good deal of reverse commuting—a Puerto Rican father, for example, drives each dawn from the slums of the South Bronx north to the automobile plant in Tarrytown. Another result is unemployment.

A Census Bureau study found that while the number of jobs in St. Louis dropped by 50,000 between 1952 and 1966, they rose in nearby suburbs by 193,500. Philadelphia lost 14,700 in this period, while its suburbs gained 249,433. New York City gained 111,000 jobs compared with 888,000 for the entire metropolitan area.

What the planners, commissions and a few government officials are preaching, and what the civil rights groups are trying to accomplish, is the construction of subsidized apartments—the only kind of new housing that most working-class families, white or black, can afford—on some of the acres and acres of undeveloped, vacant land that ring the cities like nooses. The complexity of this struggle will surely make the lunch-counter sit-ins and the freedom rides look romantically pure in their moral appeal. The zoning fight is expected to be even more tedious and wearing than the battle for integrated schools or jobs, because it poses a real threat to a style of American life that is idealized in television ads and woven into the fabric of the contemporary American Dream.

With few exceptions, Americans from Thomas Jefferson on have disliked cities. And in a civilization where most people must earn their living in cities, the middle class has sought to create non-urban environments—a man's own house, his own little plot of ground on a quiet street, "safety" in the fact that his neighbors are just like himself. If they are successful, civil rights groups will gain some access, on a painfully piecemeal basis, to some of the land now reserved for this escape from urban life. Thus trapped between their convictions and their style of life, many middle Americans may give up their alliances with civil rights groups and prepare for a bitter fight.

The zoning issue has been called the new frontier of the civil rights movement. It is perhaps the first course of litigation by the movement's remaining institutions that dwells not on race but on economic class. In fact, two planning consultants to the NAACP, Neil Newton Gold and Paul Davidoff, have observed that zoning now bars such a broad group of people that most of those to be helped by the battle are white, not black.

The earlier open housing struggle in the suburbs focused on the Negro Ph.D., who could afford the house and would make "a fine neighbor." The zoning struggle stresses the rights of those who can't afford the house, and who, in the eyes of many suburbanites, will make dubious neighbors. It seems almost a final, sad recognition that the American myth is indeed only mythology, that the poor have no real hope of rising through the social strata of this nation like champagne bubbles, finally to melt into the ethereal air of assimilation and "success."

The economic theme of this civil rights campaign, however, gives towns some potent social and fiscal arguments for their "snob zoning." As a lawyer in Oyster Bay, L. I.—the NAACP's first target—commented with chilling accuracy, "The very fabric of our society is based on economic discrimination." Furthermore, while a factory is an economic asset to a town that needs its tax revenue, every poor, large family moving into a subsidized (and therefore probably tax-abated) apartment represents a deficit. School costs will rise with no corresponding increase in the tax base.

This argument is not simply a mask for racial and economic prejudice; it is also quite real. Mr. Gold and Mr. Davidoff, among others, have suggested broad changes in the tax system, so that individual towns would not have to raise revenue themselves but could depend on federal reimbursements based, for example, on population.

Most of the constitutional challenges now pending in the federal courts attack restrictive zoning on the ground that it violates the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of equal protection for all citizens under the law. Zoning that is established to exclude vast portions of the population constitutes an improper use of the police power of the state, the civil rights lawyers argue. The New York Regional Plan Association provided considerable ammunition for that argument when it found that families with annual incomes below $12,000 cannot afford homes in the suburbs around New York City, where a total of 99.2 per cent of the undeveloped land is zoned for single-family homes. Most of the region's land, therefore, is inaccessible to 80 per cent of the region's population.

The National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing has begun court action in Union City, Calif.; Lawton, Okla., and Montclair, N.J. The NAACP's proposed case against Oyster Bay, L. I., is expected to go to court shortly.

Oyster Bay is one of those towns that like factories, but don't want to hobnob with the people who work in them. Several major aircraft manufacturers, among them Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation and the Republic Aviation Division of Fairchild Hiller, have plants in Oyster Bay. Meanwhile, according to the NAACP, the tiny proportion of blacks in the town is actually dropping.

But perhaps the most flagrant example of discriminatory zoning occurred in Union City, Calif., a town of 13,550 that lies 10 miles south of Oakland. In recent years, farmland there has been rezoned piece by piece for housing developments. But a year ago last spring, when a group of Mexican-Americans obtained City Council rezoning of a 23.4-acre parcel for 279 apartments to be built under a federal subsidy program, white residents in an adjacent development circulated petitions, brought the issue to a referendum, and reversed the City Council. Ironically, the Mexican-Americans have lived in Union City a good deal longer than the whites in that development, but they haven't been able to get out of their rotting barrios. In all the rezoning actions for the benefit of newly arriving whites, no referendum was ever held. Despite what might seem a clear case to the layman, a motion to convene a three-judge court (necessary to hear constitutional argument) was denied by a federal district court. On an appeal to the circuit court in San Francisco, the most significant ruling yet on exclusionary zoning was obtained. The circuit court remanded the case to the district court, directing that the finding need not be based on the motives underlying the zoning. That is, the Mexican-Americans did not have to prove that the whites in Union City intended to discriminate (a difficult thing to prove in a courtroom); they simply had to show that the effect of the zoning was discriminatory. The case has been heard, and a decision is expected soon.

It is this case that many legal experts, including some in the Nixon Administration, expect to provide a landmark decision.

The courts have long been reluctant to hear zoning cases, insisting repeatedly that judges are not super-planners. The Supreme Court has been silent on zoning questions for about forty years. But civil rights lawyers are hopeful. The Supreme Court agreed recently to hear a challenge of California's law permitting local referendums on zoning matters. This issue is peripheral to the question of whether zoning may constitutionally exclude persons on economic grounds, but the Court may be signaling its view that zoning is a critical matter that needs adjudication. The standard judicial justification for zoning is that it promotes the "health, safety, morals, welfare and reasonable comfort" of the population. Civil rights lawyers are trying to push the idea that the population should be defined on a regional, not municipal, basis. And they are betting on a Supreme Court decision in the 1926 case of Euclid, Ohio v. Ambler Realty. While the court upheld the town's right to exclude industry, it added:

"It is not meant by this, however, to exclude the possibility of cases where the general public interest would so far outweigh the interest of the municipality that the municipality would not be allowed to stand in the way."

One difficulty with the route through the courts, some planners contend, is that the judiciary's tools are brittle, unable to adjust finely enough to rezone this plot and that. The courts have expressed similar views, holding that each case must be regarded individually. Nevertheless, there is some fear that if the NAACP succeeds in getting aspects of zoning stricken down, the power to zone will be weakened as a tool for insuring orderly, functional development. Planners in groups such as the New York Regional Plan Association argue that strong zoning powers, used wisely, can create well-planned communities with apartments, single-family houses, shopping areas and substantial open space, instead of the monotonous, inefficient sprawl that characterizes the suburbs now.

The NCDH maintains that it is trying to get the courts to set certain standards for the use of zoning. Each case, their lawyers say, represents a carefully devised part of the mosaic. But once certain important limits and ground rules are set by the judiciary, some planners believe, the best way to control zoning so as to use it in an equitable manner may rest in the powers of the states and the federal government.

Massachusetts recently enacted a state law establishing a zoning commission to which aggrieved parties could appeal local zoning ordinances and rulings. New York State formed a powerful Urban Development Corporation in 1968, headed by the controversial former czar of urban renewal in Boston and New Haven, Edward J. Logue. On the federal level, the Department of Housing and Urban Development has said it plans to give preference in its water, sewer and open-space grants to towns that tear down their walls of restrictive zoning.

But government is timid. Despite Mr. Logue's pronouncements in Look and elsewhere that suburban land must be opened up, he has yet to use his power to ignore local zoning and build subsidized housing in a town that doesn't want it. The reason: fifteen bills were introduced in the state legislature this year to dilute his power, and one passed the Assembly. Also, his boss, Nelson Rockefeller, is up for re-election this fall.

The Nixon Administration has quietly and, one feels, almost embarrassedly, introduced legislation in Congress requiring the Attorney General to move against any locality that enacts zoning or building codes that "prevent the reasonable provision in such areas of low- and moderate-income housing eligible for federal assistance in a manner inconsistent with any state or local comprehensive or master plans for such areas." But the Administration is not pushing this bill too hard.

In fact, it has declared its outright opposition to a measure introduced by Rep. Thomas L. Ashley, a Democrat of Ohio, that would create a federal agency to help plan for urban regions and set up machinery to help finance the construction of new towns, which are probably the best approach to heading off the inevitable sprawl, by planning sensible, integrated communities on what is now undeveloped vacant land.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is concerned because Secretary George Romney's pet project, known as Operation Breakthrough, may be frustrated by zoning restrictions. Breakthrough is an attempt to get industry to perfect and use prefabricated, industrialized techniques to produce housing; in return, the federal government is trying to create a mass market for the product. But without access to the land, the product has no place to go, and industry is not about to come forth on a large scale with another Edsel. Harold B. Finger, who heads the program, is a young man who sounds as if he had blundered into the wrong administration.

"What is the effect and intent of such zoning?" Finger asked in a recent speech. "It is specifically aimed at assuring that the blacks . . . will be contained in those central cities and isolated there—abandoned by primarily white, middle and higher income families who have fled to the social and economic homogeneous, protective shelter in the suburban areas surrounding most of our major northern cities. These more fortunate families who had the freedom of choice and the mobility to move out to the suburban areas were encouraged to do so and assisted in doing so by federal housing, highway and other programs. Once there, these more affluent families insist that their local governmental bodies set up rules—zoning rules—designed to assure that homogeneity is preserved."

Finger then said he understood that in the suburbs of Cleveland, where he was giving his talk, local government "has determined that it can no longer transport students to the private and parochial schools in the area. The basic reason is that they cannot find the drivers that are required. They have basically been so effective in assuring homogeneity that they no longer have people who can perform the services required. It isn't a new phenomenon that those who would erect barriers against the equal opportunity of others, themselves become prisoners."

Despite the rhetoric, HUD is doing little about it. Finger, one of the more candid men in government, readily admits that HUD's sewer, water and open-space grants are no real lever against most towns with exclusionary zoning. A better approach, he says, would be to deny all federal aid—including aid to education—to towns that persisted in banning subsidized housing. But HUD shows no movement in that direction, either. In fact, when it was asked by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing to file an amicus curiae brief in the Union City case, the agency refused, even though a federal project was being blocked there. On the other hand, the New York City Planning Department, 3,000 miles away, did file a brief to dramatize the nationwide scope of the problem.

It has become so fashionable to talk about the suburbs that even Spiro Agnew did so in a recent speech. "Ghetto residents are denied the income gains and improvements in housing quality that would result from freer access to suburban jobs and land," he said. Does that sound like something the NAACP might have written? It was. Mr. Agnew's speech writer simply lifted whole sections of the address from a memo and magazine article written by Gold and Davidoff. "We're delighted," said Gold. So were a lot of other people. But the Vice President said nothing about action. Government remained mostly in the talking stage. □ of one of them, "Igra Umykaniiya." Neither do I; and, looking at the manuscript of the full score recently, I noticed that I didn't like the Russian title either, in 1913, and canceled it then in favor of the French, "Jeu de Rapt." Karlinsky also prefers the spelling "Idut-vedut" to my "eedoot-veedoot." And, clearly, "id," as in Freud, and "ut," as in utter, are different sounds than "eed" and "oot," which is how I pronounce the Russian syllables. But, then, I do not understand any transliteration system, and have rarely been able to recognize the words of singers who are dependent on them.

Karlinsky cites the absence of that spurious "What I Wanted to Express" essay as the "most glaring omission" from the new volume of facsimile sketches of The Rite (Boosey and Hawkes, 1969). But his own omission in reviewing the publication, the failure to mention its measure-by-measure description of the original choreography, is far more glaring. So much more valuable than any commentary, the score of the choreography (recovered in 1967) not only changes and deepens the interpretation of the music (especially in matters of phrasing) but makes possible the re-creation of the ballet as it was conceived. The Rite of Spring has never been staged by an American company, incidentally, and, impertinent as it may be for me to say so, what better excuse could be found than the chance to revive the Nijinsky original for the first time since 1913? I would come back to see that myself.

Igor Stravinsky

Berkeley, Calif.

DEAR SIRS: It is very important to have Mr. Stravinsky's own statement that the essay "What I Wanted to Express in The Rite of Spring" is spurious. The essay keeps popping up in various articles and references published in the Soviet Union and the author's own disavowal (I had not seen any earlier ones) should set the matter to rest. Whoever translated the essay from the French did a clever job of aping the stylistic mannerisms employed in the Russian titles of the ballet's sections. It is also extremely interesting to learn that these titles were Roerich's and not Stravinsky's, for they do, indeed, resemble the titles Roerich gave to his own paintings.

As for the matter of transliteration, Mr. Stravinsky's mention of singers finally explains his and Mr. Craft's preference for the arbitrary and illogical system of transcribing Russian in their books. But Russian and English phonemic systems are not mutually convertible with ease, and even singers will not be helped by such whimsical transliteration unless they are shown what sounds are involved (cf. Evelyn Lear and Cathy Berberian on the recent Columbia album of Stravinsky songs, with their perfectly intelligible Russian despite their slight accents, and other artists in the same album, not a word of whose Russian can be made out).

I first read Igor Glebov's book on Stravinsky in Los Angeles (ca. 1941), when my high school music-appreciation teachers and most American music critics and reviewers all shrilly insisted that Stravinsky was finished as a composer after The Rite of Spring. Reading that book helped make me understand and love Stravinsky's music of all periods and for that I'm still grateful. On recent rereading I found some of the musicological analysis hazy and I could have done without so much irrelevant sociological commentary. But what Gleboy had to say about Les Noces, Renard, and Histoire du Soldat in the 1920s still seems brilliant to me, and I am sorry to learn that Mr. Stravinksy disagrees.

I cannot tell whether Mr. Stravinsky agrees or not with the basic premise of my article, namely, that it is desirable and important to relate his early music to its Russian cultural background. But I welcome his corrections and emendations, and especially the new facts on The Rite of Spring.

Simon Karlinsky
